RAJASTHAN UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

	DATE L	ABELO?) Page 19
Call No. V2:	1:115	11.3	E.5 FEB 196
Accn. No. 86			Date of Release for loan
This book before the date l			library on or
	1

			, _

subject a grain of silver, that thou mayest for even from implies, through the intervenform a treasure?"—became the rule of tion of the English. Ram Narrain, the Meer Cossin; and, in the short space of governor of Patna, afforded a remarkable eight months, he wrought a wonderful example of this ill-judged partiality. He change for the better, though at a cost of had been placed in office by Ali Verdi personal exertion which he described by de- Khan, and was one of the few nobles whose claring, that he had "scarce had leisure to fidelity to Surajah Dawlah remained invio-drink a little nater, nor a minute's time to late. After the deposition and murder of eat or enjoy sleep."4

please those especially by whom it was most to Moorshedahad under the promise of Ihis needed; and the camp of the Mogal be-tish protection, in order, as the proposer of came in consequence the rallying ground of this notable scheme did not hesitate to many discontented remindars and petty from, to obtain a convenient opportunity raishs who were not strong enough to for cutting off his head. The experience reled in their own names. Early in 1761 of Clive in the art of writing "reothing" an engagement took place between the imperial forces and those of Meer Cossim and for the national honour, not made use of the English under Major Carnac. The emission in the present case; on the contrary, the peror was again defeated; the small French ungenerous policy of maintaining a rival corps by which he had been supported quite party in the court of the nabob, induced dispersed; and its indefatigable leader, favourable terms to be made with Rum M. Law, taken prisoner.; Immediately; Narrain, and he was confirmed in his govafter the battle, evertures of peace were ernment despite the opposition of his nomimade by the victors, through the intersen-tion of a brave Hindow general, whose name, whatever it may have been, has been nuglicennstances, between constant warfare and circl into Rojah Shitabroy. The proposis a disaffected ruler, the revenues of Patna tion was gladly accepted; Shah Alum pro-celled to Patna, and there bestowed en treesury of Moorehedahad. Ram Narrain Meer Cossim the investiture of the govern-ment of the three provinces, on condition he felt for Meer Justier, and found no diffiof the annual payment of twenty-four lace culty in resisting or cycling his demands; of rapecs. The Ruplish commander then but Meer Cossim was a man of a different escorred the emperor come distance on his examp; and a fierce and prolonged dispute road to join Shuja Doulah, the nabih of took place between the nabob and the Oude. External hostility had scarcely been governor-the former demanding the im-removed from the path of Meer Cassin, her mediate settlement of all arrears; the latter, fere obstacles of a domestic character took on one pretence or other, refusing even to its place. Several Hindos officials of high render the accounts justly demanded from rank persisted in evading his just demands him. The refractory subordinate relied on t for a settlement of outstanding accounts, the protection of the English, and long and sercenced themselves from panishment, continued to be upbeld in his unwarrantable

* Verslüggis Namatics, i., 214.

† After the fate of the day had been decided, Law, though descried by his countrymen, refused to quit the field; and search to the real by the interfailure of Lis attempts to up hold the interests of the Project nation, sat down extelde a gum ready trilling and any transitions of the strongest should be put in practice. Therefore the investimanner the military qualifications of the Euglish; ture was performed in the hall of the English faradding, that if they did but possess equal proficiency tory, a platform being made of two dining-tables in the arts of government, and manifested as much covered with cloth, on which to enthrone the fallen solicitude for the welface of native communities | majesty of the house of Timur.

this prince, Meer Jullier had argently soli-Such rigid supervision was sure to dis- cited Clive to induce Ram Narrain to come in time of jever, as they did forethought in war, then no nature in the world would be werthier of command. "Run," he adds, "such is the little regard they show to the people of their kingdoms, and each their aparty and indifference to their welfare, that the Bengal officials to their "honourable masters," procured the dismissal of all by whom it had been signed. This measure failed in producing the intended effect; for of the refractory members, the majority, like their leader, had realised immense fortunes by the use of more or less discreditable means; others paid the penalty of sharing the violence of their predecessors by expulsion from the company's service. Although subsequently reinstated, their temporary absence left the governor in a minority in council, and vested the personal opponents of the nabob with overwhelming power. Mr. Vansittart, in rectitude of character, discretion, and gentlemanly bearing, was infinitely superior to his fellow-efficials; but he lacked energy to control their unruly tempers, and successfully oppose their selfish ends. It appears that he and the other four gentlemen associated with him (that is, all the members of the select committee then in Bengal), did eventually receive from Cossim Ali the muchcanvassed thenty lacs. This single drawback on a general reputation for disinteresteduces, afforded an opening of which his onemies well knew how to take advantage, and every effort made to check their illegitimate gains was treated as an act of corrupt and sonal partiality towards the naboli.

We have already seen that in the time of Moorshed Keeli Khan, the English officials had striven to construc the firmanns granted by the emperor Veroksheer, as conferring not only exemption from custom-dues on all foreign commerce, but as including the produce of the country, which they asserted ought to pass untaxed, if accompanied by their durfuelts or licenses, even from one district to another. Now, as half the local revenue was, by the system universally pursued, obtained by innumerable petty dues levied on merchandise, at frequent intervals, in its passage from place to place, it than the market price.§ followed that such an unreasonable claim, if granted, must prove highly injurious to the income of the province, and ruinous to the native traders, who, fettered by taxation, could not hope to compete with their favoured rivals. The manifest injustice of the demand procured its speedy, and for a time, complete abandonment. At a subsequent period the directors (in a dispute with the Dutch regarding the right of the emperor to grant the English merchants a monopoly for the sole purchase of saltpetre, notwithstanding the promise of free trade conceiled to their competitors) laid it down as an axiom, that the design of all firmauns granted to Europeans was to admit them "to the same freedom of trailing with the Mogul's own subjects-surely not a better."* In fact, the interests of the company were in no manner concerned in the question of inland traffic, because this had been entirely resigned to their servants; and every attempt at encroachment made by them during the strong administrations of Moorshed Kooli and Ali Verdi Khan had been carefully suppressed, until the latter ruler became weakened by age, foreign wars, and domestic *orrows. The previous efforts were recommanced and increased at the time of the accession of Surajali Dowlah-ro much so, that the articles signed by the English on the surrender of Cossimbarar in May, 1757, included a specific promise to make good all that the Mohammedan government had suffered from the abuse of dustucks. This pledge was far from being redeemed, and the abuse complained of rose to such an extent, despite the repeated remonstrances of Meer Jaffier, that not only every servant of the company, together with their gomustalis or native agents, claimed complete immunity in carrying on inland trade in salt, betel-nut, tohacco, bamboos, dried fish, &c., but even the Bengalee merchants found it expedient to purchase the name of some member of the presidency; and by virtue of "dustneks" thus obtained, could laugh at the resence officers, and compel the natives, on penalty of flogging or imprisonment, to buy goods nt more, or sell them at considerably less,

Had Mr. Vansittart been a man of mere determination, he might probably have averted a new revolution; but the compromising character of his measures served only to envourage his intractable asswipted. taking a firm stand on the justice of the question, and insisting upon the proper page goods supplied in grante todays, often exclusive of commissions while it o matter more ante manufe to our juntor servante, and for an action considerations receive their ground erwered with the everything Damest eteren unter ten fen fit gemannen for maren

Vansittatt's Narratice, ii., 163.

[†] Treaty with Surajah Dowlah; eide Scrafton's Reflections on the Government of Indostan, p. 63.

Vansittart's Norratice, in, 113.

The existence and notoriety of these practices is evidenced in a letter from the directors, dated April, thousands, whomat the second tree for his of any per 1760, in which it is asserted, that the chiefs of subor- real credit for and of the same for the same dinate factories gained full twenty per cent, upon the continue we need a farrow to grown

ment of taxes necessary to the maintenance of the country government, he would doubtless have been supported by the directors, who, unbiassed by self-interest, would then, as on a subsequent occasion, have given an honest decision on so plain a case. But Vansittart, aware of the extreme anxiety of the nabob to preserve peace with the English, hoped to bring about an arrangement by offering, on their behalf, the payment of nine per cent. (a rate not a quarter the amount of that exacted from native traders) upon the prime cost of goods at the time of purchase, after which no further duties should be These terms were settled at a imposed. private interview between the nabob and the governor, and the latter departed highly pleased at having brought about an amicable of half the country, and were required adjustment. But he did not understand the blinding influence of the factious and grasping spirit of the men with whom he had to deal. The members of council, absent in their capacities of chiefs of factories, were called together: even majors ference to the projects already canvassed in Adams and Carnac, though empowered to give a vote only in military affairs, were suffered to come and join a discussion in which they were unprofessionally, and not very creditably, interested as traders; and the result was, the refusal of an overwhelming majority to ratify the pledge given by their president. Warren Hastings, who had lately been elevated to the council, alone stood by Vansittart, and eloquently pleaded the cause of justice, relating the had not shown "any instance of a vicious or oppressions he had himself witnessed while employed in an inferior expacity in different factories, but with no beneficial result.*

Meer Cossin soon saw the state of the ease; -a governor, willing but unable to proteet him against the rapacity of subordinate He knew their vulnerable point; and instead of wasting more time in fruitless complaints, aimed a well-directed blow by proclaiming free trade among his own sub- leader; and the chief warlike enterprise of jects for the ensuing two years. It was his administration (an invasion of Nepaul) clearly the most equitable and statesmanlike measure that could have been adopted; but the council, in their unbridled wrath at having the native traders placed on a level with themselves, denounced it as a shameless infringement on the company's prerogative; and, upon this flimsy pretext, sent a deputation to the nabob, consisting of

In the course of these discussions, Mr. Batson, one of the council, struck Hastings a blow. The injured party, with true dignity, left to his colleagues the charge of dealing with the offender.

Mr. Amyatt and Mr. Hay, to demand its immediate annulment. Meer Cossim refused to discuss the subject, and, in commenting on the decision of the council-that all disputes between English gomastalis and his officers, should be referred to the chiefs of the company's factories-he said their justice consisted simply in this :- "they abuse and beat my officers, and send them away bound." Regarding the immediate question at issue, he vindicated the abolition of customs on the plea of necessity, the conduct of the English having atterly prevented their realisation, and thus deprived him of one-half his revenues. The remainder, he added, arose from land-rents, which were diminished by the abstraction to pay his standing army. Under these eirenmstances he would be well pleased to be relieved of his irksome task, and see some other person placed in his stead as naboh, This proposition was probably made in recouncil (and of which he doubtless had some knowledge), for his supercession in the event of the outbreak of hostilities. The tone and bearing of Meer Cossim were, however, still on the whole so deprecating and conciliatory, that no fear of the consequences appears to have arisen in the minds of the council to suggest the danger of driving him to extremities. The governor explicitly declares that, up to this period, the nabob a violent disposition; he could not be taxed with any act of cruelty to his own subjects, nor treachery to us."† Of his troops a very contemptible opinion had been formed; they were spoken of as "undisciplined rabble," whom a single European detachment could at once disperse: while Meer Cossim himself was known to possess neither taste nor talent as a military had proved a failure. But sufficient account had not been made of the eare with which the native army had been gradually brought to a state of unprecedented efficiency; their number being diminished by the payment and dismissal of useless portions, while the remainder were carefully trained, after the European manner, by the aid of some military adventurers who entered the service of Meer Cossim. Among these the most celebrated was a man called by the natives 4 Vansittari's Narratice, iii., 391.

Sumpoo, 1 le was a German, Walter Reine- I had been his self-control, that not even the hard by name, and came to India as a ser-Igovernor or Mr. Hastings (the two Eurogeant in the service of France. Military abilities raised him to high favour with Meer ever suspected the fierer passions which lay Cossim, and he became the chief instigator hid beneath the veil of a singularly dignified and instrument of the ernelties which disgraced the close of the struggle with the presidency. The abuse of certain discretionary powers vested in Mr. Illis by the council, despite the opposition of the governor, precipitated matters. Patna was scized by the English, and, to their surprise, immediately regained by Meer Cossim. Mr. Amyatt was at this time on his way back to Calcutta; Mr. Hay being detained as a hostage for the safety of some of the native officials then imprisoned at Calcutta. Oplers were given for the capture of Mr. Aments: he was intercepted, and, with several ! of his companions, slain in the struggle which casued, The council closed all avenues to reconciliation with Meer Cossim, by the restoration of the man who, three years before, had been pronounced utterly! unfit to reign. Suddenly annulling all that | had been said and done-setting aside the imperial investiture, and everything else. Meer Jaffier, without even the form of a rear. But the steadiness of the troops prefresh treaty, was, by a strange turn of the sailed over the impetuosity of their assailwheel of circumstances, again hurried to the lants, and eventually provured a complete musuad from whence he had so lately been victory. ignominiously expelled.

Vansittart, overpowered by bitter opposition, and sinking under ill-health, no longer treasures to the stronghold of Rhotas, he strave to stem the torrent. It was an emergency in which he thought "justice must | give way to necessity," and accordingly he foes. Ham Narrain, with ten relatives, and signed the proclamation inviting the people other native prisoners of note, were the first of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa to rally round livitims after the battle of Geriah. A no the standard of Meer Jaffier; with other less disastrous engagement, in September, documents, whose contents were wholly at hear Ondwa, was followed by the execution variance with his previous measures; only of the celebrated bankers, Juggut Scit and declaring that he would resign the govern- his brother (or causin), of whose persons ment to room as Meer Cossint should be the nabab had some time before obtaine? subdued. This did not prove so easy a possession. Pinally, the treacherous extask as had been expected. The ex-nation render of Monghyr, which he learned at made a last effort at an accommodation by Pating occasioned an order for the incoa letter to the presidency, in which he diate execution of all prisoners confindenied having given any order for the there, including fifty of the extraction of Mr. Amyatt; but, at the servants, civil and military. According same time, referred significantly to the number were Hay, Ellis, and Louise number of English captured at Patna, (the person before named as large content.) plainly intimating that their fale depended feited the signature of Adv at the signature on the terms made with him. The threat Mr. Fullarton, a surgeon, in the series

His nowede guerre of Summer was changed by the French soldiers into Sombre, on account of his dark complexion, pronounced by the natives Sumroo. i instrumental in urging the Armen a bearing and guarded language. No decisive measure was therefore taken for the rescue of the prisoners, but only letters written, threstoning misparing vengeance in the event of any injury being inflicted upon them. These communications did but add fuel to fire. Meer Cossim well knew the stake for which he played - independent sway over at least a part of Bengal, or a violent death, with the possible alternative of poverty and expatriation in the dominions. of his powerful neighbour, Shuja Dowlah. The English took the field in 1763, and commenced operations by the successful attack of the army stationed to protect Mearshedaliad. The city was captured; and in the following month, the severest conflict which the Haglish had yet sustained took place on the plain of Geriah. battle lasted four hours, and the enemy at one period broke the line, seized two gins, and attacked the 84th regiment front and Meer Cosum was driven from place to place; defeat and disgrace degged his steps; and after sending his family and commenced a series of executions at once, to gratify his revenge and intimidate las was little heeded. So perfect and uniform fession more peaceful this tacitly admitted to be true, by being granted, and the whole twenty-four were executed, despite the earnest remonstrances and even open opposition of their comrades.

[†] Vannittart's Norratice. . . . : I He is stated by Verre

Military men have applauded this transaction as a piece of well-timed and necessary severity; those who, like myself, question both the lawfulness and expediency of capital punishments, and deem war and standing armies the reproach and not the glory of Christian nations, will probably view the whole affair in a different light.

In the middle of September (1764) the British troops again took the field, and having crossed the Sone in spite of the opposition of a corps of cavalry, advanced towards the intrenched camp of the vizier at Buxar. sharp conflict took place, and lasted about three hours; the enemy then began to give way, and slowly retired; but an immediate pursuit being commenced, Shuja Dowlah procured its abandonment, though at an immense sacrifice of life,* by destroying a bridge of boats upon a stream of water two miles from the field of battle. The emperor seized the opportunity of escaping from his tyrannical minister, pitched his tents beside those of the English, and placed himself under their protection. Renewed overtures for peace, on the part of Shuja Dowlah, were again met by a demand for the surrender of Meer Cossim and Sumroo. The former, fearing to trust his life any longer in the hands of one who had already taken advantage of his defenceless position to obtain possession of the chief part of the gold and iewels which he had brought from Bengal, now fled to the Rohilla country, whither he had fortunately eaused some treasure to be conveyed before the confiscation ordered by his ungenerous ally, on pretence of paying the troops. Sumroo, no less faithless than cruel, had deserted him; and, with a large body of trained sepoys, had joined the force little doubt he would have been specially of Shuja Dowlah before the battle of Buxar. This piece of treachery nearly proved fatal to its perpetrator; for the vizier, anxious to come to terms with the English, and yet to avoid the infamy of delivering up the deserter, positively offered to procure his assassination in presence of any two or three witnesses chosen by Major Munro, and evinced great surprise at the rejection of this truly oriental proposal. It should exercise after 'numerous.

be remarked, however, in justice to Shuja Dowlah, that though willing to plunder Meer Cossim to the last rupee, he could not be induced to surrender his person on any terms; and even for the life and liberty of the villain Sumroo, he would willingly have paid a heavy ransom; for it was not until after the rejection of the offer of a sum of fifty-eight lacs, in lieu of delivering up the fugitives, that he made the treacherous suggestion above narrated regarding Sumroo. Whether he really intended to carry it out, or if, on the contrary, some other stratagem was designed in the event of the plan being approved by the English, cannot be ascertained. It is certain that his army was in no condition to renew hostilities, and, indeed, never recovered the effects of the late decisive engagement.

Meanwhile corruption, venality, and oppression reigned unchecked in Bengal. The name of a nation, once highly hononred, became alike hateful in the ears of Mussulmans and Hindoos. † The approach of a party of English sepoys served as a signal for the desertion of whole villages, and the shopkeepers fled at the approach of the palanquin of the passing traveller, fearing that their goods might be seized for an almost nominal value, and they themselves abused and beaten for offering a remonstrance. The people at large were reduced to a state of unprecedented misory; the ungenerous and impolitic advantage taken of their weakness, having put it in the power of every marauder who chose to spite himself an English servant, to planting with tyrannise over them without control. effect, Warren Hastings plainty केरोक्टर कर be, "not only to deprive them at their even laws, but to refuse them even the levels of any." Had all this wrong meeting from the will of a single desput there can be removed by a committation of the out offcers, or, as Melammedian history shords so many instances, heren smitten to the earth by a private individual, in vengesnes for some special injury. But the tyranny of a far-distant association, dreadful and incomprehensibir burrend any bugbear ever painted premiestiffe merering erre alternative feature simme oncies.

नार द्वार

in th.

^{*} Stated at 2,000 men drowned or otherwise Icst : - Time besides which, 2,000 men were left dead on the feel memors with 133 pieces of cannon. The loss of the English manne of in killed and wounded, was 847.

of which the hundred hands and arms of the 1765, had been shortly preceded by the de-Hindoo idols could convey but a faint and | parture of Governor Vansittart and Warren feeble image.

Oppression reached a climax under the second administration of Meer Jaffier. He left to conduct the profitable affair of enhad previously complained in foreible language " of the injury done to the native merchants, as well as to the provincial revenues, by the abuse of the privileges conferred by the firmaun; but to this wrong he formally assented when replaced on the musnud. It soon, however, became manifest that it mattered little what the terms of the agreement had been; for he was regarded simply as "a banker for the company's servants, who could draw upon him as often, and to as great an extent as they pleased."+ clause for compensation to individuals proved, as might have been foreseen, a handle for expessive extortion. At the time of its insertion the nabob had been assured that, although it was impossible to specify the particular amounts of claims, they would not altogether exceed ten lacs; notwithstanding which, the demand was increased to twenty, thirty, forty, and at last reached fifty-three lacs. Seven-eighths of this sum, according to the testimony of Mr. Scrafton, then an E. I. director, "was for losses sustained (or said to be sustained) in an illicit monopoly of the necessaries of life, carried on against the orders of the company, and to the utter ruin of the India merchants." He adds, that "half of this sum was soon extorted from the nabob, though the company were at that time sinking under the burden of the war, and obliged to borrow great sums of money of their servauts at eight per cent. interest, and even with that assistance could not carry on both their war and their investment, but sent their ships half loaded to Europe." $\frac{1}{2}$ The military establishment of the English had by this time increased to 18,000 horse and foot, and its ill-regulated expenditure soon swallowed up the thirty lacs paid by Meer Jaffier, as also the further sum of five lacs a month, which he had agreed to furnish during the continuance of the war.

Pressed on all sides by extortionate claims, despised and brow-beaten by the very men who had used him as an instrument for their private ends, the nabob sank rapidly to an unhonoured grave. His death in January,

"The poor of my country," said Meer Jaffier, used to get their bread by trading in salt, betelnut, and tobacco, which the English have now taken to themselves; by which my poor are starving, my revenues ruined, and no advantage to the company."

Hastings for England; and in the absence of any restraining influence, the council were throning a new nabob after their own fashion. The choice lay between the eldest illegitimate son of Jaffier, Nujeem-ad-Dowlah, aged twenty years, and the infant son of Meeran. The claim of the emperor to appoint an officer was considered far too inconvenient to be acknowledged; it would be easy to extort his sanction when the selection was made. Repeated offers had been made by him to bestow on the English real power over the revenues of Bengal, by vesting in them the right of collection. This office, called the dewannee, had been devised during the palmy days of the empire as a means of preventing attempts at independence on the part of the subahdar, the dewan being designed to act as treasurer, appointed from, and accountable to, the Delhi government, leaving the subahdar to direct in all other matters. This arrangement had been allowed to fall into disuse; for Ali Verdi Khan had usurped the whole authority, both financial and judicial. Shah Alum must have been too well acquainted with the state of affairs, to doubt that the English, if they accepted the dewannee, would be sure to engross likewise all real power vested in the subahdar; but he expected in return a tribute, on the regular payment of which dependence might be placed. It did not, however, suit the views of the representatives of the E. I. Cy. to occupy a position which should render them personally accountable for the revenues. A nabob—i.e., a person from whom "presents" might be legally received-could not be dispensed with. The child of Meeran was old enough to understand the worth of sugarplums, but hardly of rupees; and his claims were set aside for those of Nujeem-ad-Dowlah. The new nabob consented to everything demanded of him: agreed to entrust the military defence of the country solely to the English, and even to allow of the appointment, by the presidency, of a person who, under the title of Naib Subah, should have the entire management of the affairs of gov-He eagerly advocated the nomination of Nuncomar to fill this important

⁻⁽Fide Scrafton's Observations on Vansittart's Narrative, printed in 1766, pp. 38.'9.)

† Chive's speech, 1772;—Almon's Debates, xiv.
† Scrafton's Observations, pp. 48-'9.

[§] See preceding section on Mogul Empire, p. 117.

office, but in vain; and the selection of an experienced noble, named Mohammed Reza Khan, was perhaps the best that could have been made. The other articles of the treaty were but the confirmation of previous arrangements; and the whole affair wound up, as usual, very much to the satisfaction of the English officials concerned, among nine of whom the sum of £139,357 was distributed, besides gifts extorted from leading Indian functionaries, in all of which the ehicf share was monopolised by Mr. Johnstone, the dissenting member of council, who had so vehemently deprecated the conduct of the sclect committee of 1760, in receiving the largess of Meer Cossim. The money thus acquired was not destined to be enjoyed without a contest; for the eurb (so greatly needed) was at length about to be placed on the greediness of Bengal officials. Ever since the deposition of Surajah Dowlah, the E. I. Cy. had been spectators rather than directors of the conduct of their servants in Bengal. Clive had quitted their service with bitterness in his heart and defiance on his lips; and the example of insubordination, ambition, and eovetousness given by him, had been closely imitated by men who could not appreciate the energy and perseverance which enabled him to swim where they must sink. The representations of Mr. Vansittart, the massacre at Patna, and the sharp contest with Shuja Dowlah following that with Meer Cossim, seriously alarmed the mass of

* Second Parl. Report on E. I. Cy., 1772. † An Irish peerage was, after long delay, obtained by Clive, who took the title of Baron of Plassy: an English one, by his own account, might have been purchased with ease (Life, ii., 189); but then the enormous wealth which was to maintain its possessor on a level, in a pecuniary point of view, with the high-born aristocracy of England, rested on a precarious footing. Clive, notwithstanding his extraordinary facility of attributing to himself every possible perfection, never doubted that his position in society rested on his "bags of money and bushels of diamonds" (ii., 168), rather than on any mere personal qualifi-cations; and when urged to exert his influence in the India House, soon after his return to England, for some special purpose, in contravention to the directors, he peremptorily refused, declaring, "my future power, my future grandeur, all depend upon the receipt of the jaghire; and I should be a madman to set at defiance those who at present show no than to set at canalism inclination to hurt me." It must be remembered that Clive, besides the jaghire, had avowedly realised between three and four hundred thousand pounds during his second sojourn in India-a circumstance that greatly detracts from the effect of the fiery indignation with which, when the right was questioned of Meer Jaffier to bestow, or his own to accept, the quirent paid by the company, he came forward to save Messra. Sumner, Sykes, Verelst, and General (late

own interests, and indignation at the wrongs heaped on the natives in their name, for the sole benefit of a few ungovernable servants, conspired to rouse a strong feeling of the necessity of forthwith adopting measures ealculated to bring about a better state of things. Stringent orders were dispatched in February, 1764, forbidding the trade in salt, betcl-nut, tobacco, and all other articles whatsoever, produced and consumed in the country;* and in the following May it was directed that new eovenants should be executed by all the company's servants (civil and military), binding them to "pay over to their employers all presents received from the natives, which should exceed 4,000 rupees in value." The above orders, and the mainwere actually ly with the new nabob was made, and the sum. above stated extorted from him. Probably the directors were not unprepared for disobedience, even of this flagrant character. The execution of orders so distasteful peeded to be enforced in no common manner; and reasoning, it would seem, on the ground that it was one of those cases in which "the children of this world are wiser than the children of light," it was suggested that Clive (now a lord) was of all men the best fitted to root

East India proprietors; -- anxiety for their

up the poisonous tree he had planted.+ The inducement was not wanting; for his jaghire had been called in question; and to ensure its continuance for the next ten

a combination of ungrateful directors" (ii., 229.) "Having now," says Sir John Malcolm, "no choice between barlering his independence to obtain security for his fortune," Clive commenced hostilities after the old fashion, sparing neither bold strokes in the field, nor manœuvres in the closet. Upwards of £100,000 were employed by him in securing support by a means then commonly practised, but afterwards prohibited—viz., that of split votes. He had, however, some powerful opponents, with the chairman, Mr. Sulivan, at their head. This gentleman and Clive were at one period on intimate terms; but and three were at one period on manuace terms; our according to the latter, their seeming good-fellow-ship had been sheer hypoerisy, since, in reality, they "all along behaved like shy cocks, though at times outwardly expressing great regard and friend-ship for one another." The issue of the condict in London was materially influenced by the critical state of affilies in Calcutte. The court of vernitors state of affairs in Calcutta. The court of proprietors took up the matter in the most decided manner. Clive availed himself of the excitement of the moment, and besides the confirmation of his jaglire for ten years, obtained as a condition of his acceptance of the office of governor and commander in chief in the Bengal Presidency, the expulsion of Mr. Suli-van from the direction. The four persons associated his "undoubted property from the worst of fees- | Major) Carnae-were all subordinate to his will

foren betreo feit er, auf, naoitel mitheligte methore? about despote power, to bed Cabotta in | The events of the next menty months, maledy the error one latin to that which had but briefly narrated here. expect the E. I. Co. exceeds well founded upon his arrival, Lord Clive, and the two oppositions in . Mere Court a had been ex- members of the select committee who had policit, the every one led thrown lamed prompanied him from England, without the Poster's for protections and Shaps waiting for their destined collegues, assumed to each was a set to be a to be ear the ear the exercise of the whole powers of governefficiently at the early by a smaller experiment, call and military, after administering should of planning his present at their every, for themselves and their secretaries an oath The tray of the reasons for which such of sources. Mr. Johnstone t made in despensive to tray a vers had been sected in rate resistance to the new order of things, Core, thereby it is with a selection mitter that was at length defeated and compelled to the appropriate test to his will, had quit the service. The other members, for therefore ease I to exist; but I'm percented the most part, submitted, though with the so retaining there givees, and with suffic worst possible grace; and the meannies were sent to as up for the test to had to perform, supplied by Madras officials. The coverage managements only fulfilled, would have product forbidding the acceptance of presents Early required their exercise. As it was, were signed; then followed the prohibition of In excited a greenal storm of rays, with out findand trade by the company's corrunts. This effecting any permanent g estimat least to was a more difficult point to carry. Clive for in the rightles interest of the presidence has en maie i. The general contest, in all, such the lease on governous though probably s at half that number anombled at ordinary thectings. Among them was Mr. Johnstone, who had played so leading a part in the transcrippie of the last few years. He may a previou present of advantages, in regard both of ability and connexions, which rendered him not ill calculated to do battle with Clive; and he sampled not to retort the severe consuces east upon himself and has colleagues, by accerting that they had only followed the example given by the very man who now lamented, in the most humbartic language, the "lost fame of the the firstermed had been him miniously expelled the employ, by a going the abolest letter quoted at to WM, that and inquently remetated.

These continents Lead Cities are impanies with an adjuration which to a clearly illustrates the condition of his mind regarding a future state. "I do declare," he writes, "by that Great Being who is the searcher of all hearts, and to whom we must be are untable if there must be an hereafter, that I am come out with a mind superior to all corruption." Yet at this very time Clive scrupled not to employ his private knowledge of the state of affairs, and of the increased value of stock likely to result from the acceptance of the denannee, to write home directions in eigher (so that, if falling into strange hands, no other person should to nefit by the information), desiring years to be self or be been be received to British nation," and declared himself to have troom to be before very he sted periodical feature out with a mind superior to all corseried as a centrate referre from receiving 'raption," and a fixed resolution to put my formula by which has become pledged about the exercise of that unworthy prin-

Mer, 1765. Here I of an I matters in a though of considerable importance, can be well know that the salaries given by the U. I. Cy, were quite insufficient to maintain the political rank obtained by recent events. 2 Poverty and power, side by side with wealth and weakness, would, as he himself declared, offer to the stronger party temptations "which flesh and blood could not resist." With a full appreciation of this state of affairs, it was a plain duty to press upon the directors (as the clear-sighted and upright Sir Thomas Roe had done in the rarly part of the preceding century) & the necessity of allotting to each official a liberal income, which should hold out to all a reasonable prospect of obtaining a competency, by legitimate means, within such and Mr. Walsh acted with promptitude, by proceeding forthwith, though on a Sunday, to obtain the key of the cipher, which it seems they very imperfectly understood.—(See Thorntoo's India, i., 492.)

† Johnstone and his colleagues, when vainly pressed to make over to the company the monies received frem Nujeem ad-Dowlall, replied, that when Clive surrendered the money he had obtained from the father, they would yield in turn the gifts of the son.

The salary of a councillor was only £250; the rent of a very moderate house in Calcutta, £200. 5" Absolutely prohibit the private trade," said he, "for your business will be better done. I know this is harsh. Men profess they come not for bare wages. But you will take away this plea if you give great wages, to their content; and then you know what you part from." No amount of legitimate emolument will, however, assuage the thirst for that every shilling available, or that could be bor-rowed in his name, should be invested in E. I. stock "without loss of a minute." Mr. Hous (a director) stated term of years as experience had proved could be borne by an average European constitution. But Clive, instead of strenuously urging a policy so honest and straightforward as this, took upon himself to form a fund for the senior officers of the presidency. from the governors downwards, by resolving, after consultation only with Mr. Sumner and Mr. Verelst, that a monopoly should be formed of the trade in salt, betel-nut, and tobacco, to be carried on for their exclusive benefit, with the drawback of a duty to the company estimated at £100,000 per annum. Monopolies are odious things at best: this one was of a peculiarly obnoxious and oppressive character; and the directors wisely and liberally commanded its immediate abandonment. The arrangements of Clive could not, however, be so lightly set aside: and they continued in operation until 1768.

With regard to Shuja Dowlah, it was deemed expedient that he should be replaced in the government of Oude, although a specific promise had been made that, on payment of fifty lacs of rupees for the expenses of the war, real power over the dominions of his tyrannical vizier should be given to the emperor, in the event of the English being triumphant. But this pledge, which had been necdlessly voluntcered, was now violated; the vizier being deemed (and with reason) a better protection against Mahratta and Afghan invasion, on the north-western frontier, than his gentle master. In another matter the claims of Shah Alum were treated in an equally arbitrary manner. The arrangements concluded with him by the Calcutta government were now revised, or, in other words, set aside by Clive. The emperor was given to understand, that since it was inconvenient to put him in possession of the usurped dominions of Shuja Dowlah (commonly called the "nabob-vizier"), the districts of Corah and Allahabad (yielding jointly a revenue of twenty-eight lacs) must suffice for a royal demosne; and, at the same time, some large sums of money unquestionably due from the company to the indigent monarch, were withheld on the plea of inability to pay them.* Shah Alum remonstrated warmly, but to no purpose: he was compelled to cancel all past agreements, and bestow on the company complete possession of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa, under the name of the "perpetual Dewannee," clogged only by a yearly tribute of twenty-six lacs of rupees. The formal confirmation of the English in their various scattered settlements throughout the nominal extent of the empire. was likewise obtained; nor was the jaghire of Lord Clive, with reversion to his employers, forgotten in the arrangement. a precautionary measure against the French (who, by virtue of a recent European treaty, had been reinstated in their Bengal settlements, with the proviso of neither erecting fortifications nor maintaining troops), it was deemed expedient to obtain from the emperor a free grant of the five Northern Circars. over which Nizam Ali, the brother and successor (by usurpation and murder) of Salabut Jung, then exercised a very precarious authority. In 1760, the Nizam (as he is commonly called) had proffered these Circars to the Madras government in return for co-operation against the Mahrattas and Hyder Ali; but his overtures were rejected, because the forces required could not be spared. In 1766, an arrangement was brought about by dint of no small amount of bribery and intrigue, by which four of the Circars were surrendered, and the reversion of the fifth, or Guntoor Circar, which was held by a brother of the Nizam, Bassalut Jung, was promised to the company, on condition of the payment of a rent of nine lacs of rupees, together with a most imprudent pledge to furnish a body of troops whenever the Nizam might require their aid in the maintenance of his government. The imperial firmaun, of which the chief articles have been just recited, took away the scanty remains of power vested by the Bengal presidency in Nujeem-ad-Dowlah, The weak and dissolute character of this youth rendered him an easy tool; and when informed by Clive that every species of control was about to pass from him, aud that a stipend of fifty-three lacs would be allotted for the family of Meer Jafficr, out of which a certain sum would be placed at his disposal, this worthy prince uttered a thankful ejaculation, adding, "I shall now have as many dancing-girls as I please."+

A leading feature in the second administration of Clive remains to be noted—one of the most important, as well as the most interesting in his remarkable career. The other "reforms" effected by him were nothing better than a change of evils; but, in checking the spirit of insubordination and rapacity which pervaded the whole Anglo-

^a Thirty lacs deficit of annual tribute, besides jaghires or lands in Bengal now withdrawn, amounting to five lacs and a-half of rupees per ann.—(Mill.) † Malcolm's Life of Lord Clive, iii., 125.

It has an a, be exceed both the employ timber stations where, on account of the section will be be be bright. Char was described in tible necessary to Euro-count ally as there who exceeds the employer who is the employer with the wholly or parto tool dies in effections, that all he it illy continued. The allowance originally let us the world held been a point of the printed by the company had been doubled by ber of energy, and when questioned read by Meer Juffer, who, at the instigation while the receiving to subject to him received of Case, paid the additional sum out of take a matheted at lex Lex respects, he described for non-pocket, besides the regular exclused, with a verifice cetted but formation, point of the linglish troops engaged in a that the five is to he keem than the his serious, but estensibly as a broon revolution of the effect of the most those give led with at pleasure. His successor, Meer a relation of the state of the immension districts of Burdean, Midney or, and Chitana and the engage of the constitution of Burdean, Midney or, and Chitana and the engage of the state of the constitution of Burdean, Midney or, and Chitana and the constitution of the company the districts of Burdean, Midney or, and Chitana and the constitution of the company the districts of the constitution of the company the constitution of the cons that we of the to be a mercal cally set he west I to may, in her of certain monthly pryments; thereby strong and so. December, and although the reserves of their terri-larry, a lightway, after tel with altread toner more than covered the cost of the sign attriby, he has a classely resulted from army, including the death butto, the directhe large to day that the rich we be the flore, considering the large profits of their they be of Lordolf roll Advaral Watton Arrents and their own necessities, strin-Sain that he estate as he estate aste gain, wently ordered the discontinuance of this and let protective of training, had become the followings. Their repeated injunctions, the problem state all, and the secretic of Major joint posernment, overaged by the mili-Minore, the sigh at anisate for a time check, farry, had never direct to enforce; and even by the is there in of there, the ment while Cline del not bring forward the question of to a of the sequence of the Harman double lists until the restoration of peace grow rook and the left unto that the root it of enabled him to remodel the army by if the early note is, the engerness of the (forming it into regiments and brigades, with officers in the possession of the least the exchangement number of field-officers. There quart of que first and duty. Now, Cline was improvements were effected without opposiit a last parament the world to expect ment of tion, and the prohibition of officers receiving be content with Londinable poverty, when perquisites, or engaging in certain branches they might a squire mealth without the cost jof trade, was compensated in Clive's plan by of tail, or the stigms of undelible disgrees allowing them a liberal share in the monoattached to certain Lemons crimes; and this poly of salt, betel-nut, and tobacco. The committance, together with not uninstiral proportions to be received by the senior serpartiality, induced him to take measures vants of the company, independent of their for the introduction of a better system among the unitary arrants of the company, with far more pentleness than hel had expeed in dealing with the civilians. The affirers were to be compelled to renounce all trading purmits; this was the first reform to be earried out by Clive; the second was the final and uncompensated withdrawal of an extra allowance, called [Latta, given since an early period, but now to be abolished, excepting at some par-

. In Contlands words, ha braven-born general." ! Previous to the explore of Calcutta by Surajah Diwish, the Bergal establishment consisted of one small company of artiflery, about early European infantry (including officers), and 500 Portuguese half-caste, called topasses; out of the above, three captains, five lieutenants, and four ensigns perished in the Black-Hole. On the recapture of Calentia, a lexitation of sepoys was raised and officered from the detachments which had been sent from Madras to the relief of Fort William; and others were subsequently formed in like manner; until, at Plassy, in 1757, the British force comprised 3,000 seposs. In 1760 there!

fixed salaries, according to the lowest calculation, were £7,000 sterling per annum to a conneillor or colonel, £3,000 to a lieutenantcolonel, £2,000 to a major or factor. Some scanty amends for the shameless oppression of taxing the natives thus heavily, was made by placing the management of the trade in their hands instead of under the guidance of European agents; but even this measure was adopted from the purely selfish motive of saving expense.

more wixty Buropean officers, viz .- nineteen captains, twenty-six lieutenants, and fifteen ensigns. In 1765, Clive found the amount raised to four companies of artillery, a troop of hussars, about 1,200 regular cavalry, twenty-four companies of European infantry, and nitetern battalions or regiments of sepoys—in all, about 20,000 men—whom he divided into three brigades, each comprising one European regiment, one company of artillery, six regiments of sepoys, and one troop of native cavalry. The brigades were respectively stationed at Monghyr, Bankipoor (near Patna), and Allahabad .- (Strachey's Bengal Muliny.) 1 Even Clive admitted that by his arrangement the

for as the military were concerned, and Clive, with his usual self-reliance, considering the time at length arrived when the bood, his heavy, overlanging brow expressdouble batta might he safely abolished, withalrew it at the close of the year 1765. The : remonstrances of the officers were treated governor, but, soldier-like, on horseback, to as the idle complaints of disappointed men, and several months passed without any apprehension arising of serious consequences, placed; others were summoned from Madras mitil towards the end of April a misunderstanding among the parties concerned saddealy revealed the existence of a powerful and organised combination,* formed by the majority of the leading commanders, aided and abetted by many influential civilians, to compel the restoration of the extra allowances. It was a great and formidable emergency, but "Frangas non flectes" had been ever the motto of Clive, and now, rejecting all temporising measures, or idea of a compromise, he came forward with a deep conviction of the danger with which the precedent of military dietation would be fraught, and a firm resolve to subdue the mutiny or perish in the attempt. And there was real danger in the case; for his imperious bearing, combined with the unpopular regulations he came to enforce, had rendered him un object of strong personal ill-feeling to many individuals of note; yet, when told of threats against his life, alleged to have been uttered by one of the officers, he treated the report as an unworthy calminy, declaring that the mutineers were "Englishmen, not assassins." The dauntless courage which had distingnished the youthful defender of Arcot again found ample scope for exertion: it was no longer the over-dressed haron of Plassy +the successful candidate for power and pelf-

price of salt had been made too high for the natives, and the profit to the monopolists unreasonably large.

(Malcolm's Life of Lord Clice, iii., 259.)

From the month of December, 1765, consultations had been held and committees formed under the veil of Masonic lodges, and no less than 200 officers pledged themselves to resign their commissions on 1st of June, 1766, but ngreed to proffer their rervices for another formight, by the expiration of which time it was expected the extensive defection would compel Clive to consent to the restoration of the double batta. In the event of capital punish-ment being decreed by courts-martial, they swore to prevent the execution of any comrade at the cost of not to re-accept his commission if offered, unless his garren or, Ceptura Latham, consider

As yet all had proceeded smoothly, so the head of the then generally detested class of Anglo-Indian "nabobs,"—but plain Robert Clive, who now, in the full vigour of maning more forcibly than words a stern purpose, set forth, not in the palanquin of the face the disaffected troops. There were still same few officers on whom reliance could be and Bombay: commissions were liberally scattered throughout the ranks; the services of civilians were used to supply vacancies; and increase of pay, for a fixed period, was promised to the common soldiers, whom the officers, to their credit, had made no attempt to corrupt. The danger was in some sort increased by a threatened incursion of the Mahrattas, under their chief minister, the pcishwa Mahdoo Rao; yet, on the other land, this very circumstance aroused in the breasts of many of the malcontents a feeling of shame at the thought of deserting their colours in the face of the foc. The Monghyr brigade, under Sir Robert Fletcher, was the one in which the determination to resign had been most general; and Clive, after a long harangue, perceiving indications of a disposition to resist his orders, took advantage of the steady obedience of the sepoys, by directing them to fire on the officers unless they dispersed immediately. A general submission followed; courts-martial were held, and many of the delinquents eashiered; among others Sir Robert Fletcher, the head of the Monghyr brigade, who, although active in subduing the confederacy, was found to have heen gravely implicated in its formation. No blood was shed in these proceedings, and the result proved that such severity would impartial reader must feel to be incomplete and oneaided. The termination of the life of Clive by his own hand is not even hinted at a and there is much reason to believe the same partiality to have chiefly guided the selection of letters for publication Nevertheless, a very amosing one less crept in, ed-dressed by Clive to his infimate friend and agent, Orne the historian, filled with commissions as numerous and minute in detail as any ever received by a Lorder lady of fashion from a country cousin. Amorg a items, all of plick were to be "the best and for"? be got for love or mirey," were 2001 shirts, will and bands and rolles, while I to order. The day Clive at the Luctur for Oriental lever) wer ? " touriet erat with handsome gold lece," while the object of the confederacy were gained.

† Like most biographers, Sir John Malcoln and formed Citic arrays in a result of this coadjutors have endeavoured to set forth the character of their hero in the most favourable light than providing a strange country and by this means have drawn a picture which every forms and picture effect the light forms and picture which every forms and picture effect the light forms and picture which every forms and picture effect the light forms and picture which every forms and picture effect the light forms and picture which every forms and picture effect the light forms and picture which every forms and picture effect the light forms and picture which every forms are picture.

have marined a perdless everifier; but the friends the Johnstones. Soon after this diea critis for observations for goal with Case, I person of one of the most dangerous storms whealers well that his endeavours were not which ever membered the power of the E.I. washing to get several of the mutmous rings. Company, the health of Clive failed rapidly, In less that; but has ell its were neutralized and though carnetly solicited to continue by some wholes one doubte to the minde of the at least another year, and apparently not judges regarding the extents fithe employee, unwilling to do so, headily infirmity prevailed, but say. In the words of Sir John Mals, and he quitted Bengal for the third and last refer the tracer structure of the moting not time in January, 1767. Shortly before his induced the coordinated to viercy". It is deporture, the young indult, Sujerment. assupplatered by tothe other, that Sir Holert Dielah, died of fever, and his brother Sych-Liefel et, efter this ners in except, returned od-Donlih neapermitted to succeed him. In the In his extrement became heef for the not directly into fixing the change was of Malera precidency; while the John Petric, lessing ortance then north have been that of erat I the by the with a right round has the chief of a fullery, but it was advantageous tick, came book to Hongol with a ligh result to the energy in a perintary energy and ford-

"The endiated that, is respect to permany for ten years, or, in other words, £000,000 were going than to a see that in a state or, as the respect to the first energy protected to him a training as the respective to the first energy are the first of the constant to first a state to the first energy are the first at the second and the first tentum and the constant to first first tentum and the constant to first first tentum and the constant to first first tentum and the constant tentum and tentum and the constant tentum and tent with the modern of a select field, earlied and green it really reverted." Nevertheless, his administration to the modern of the first of the tension of the modern percentage in the first had a green a two field of the tension. It is easily a percentage in India, it appeared that formula first had been at the first had been at the first had been at the first first had been at the first property, in the first had been able to the real first f we have seen that the Great Marylam Aurungable of a law large at the Great diabetal differs of the diabetal differs as being a decrease of a feet to exercise their claim of the liberal of the Bengal establishment, with their as being a seen been a clear to be leaves to findly a seen been different as a matter of the feet of the Care better than the feet of the Care better than a constant of the present of the point of the present of the feet of the present of the feet of the present of t whatever to expect the acctionance for the purpose of jet the failure of his interest in the justice (then only building pairs and buying up in then because in Journalisted for ten years, of which a considerable they be seen to be every manifest to be town, or a fit they person the expired), the whole five has should then the fight of Meer Jaffer to be town, or a fit they revert to him. He moreover contrived to make powerful arrange to necessary to him the moreover contrived to make the first the question was altogether a person to exclude from it all persons whom he might think fundaterating in any respect sovers."—(iii., 43.) I have been justiced by a first the configuration which had been provided by linguish instrumentality. SI sh Alum received by him during his second administration, it necessary the only person who could have rightfully decrease of his fixed income, but asstematically appears that he did not apply them to the man decrease of his fixed income, but asstematically appears that the did not possible and the benefit may ded a quit-rent from the company when bestow-ing on them the demannee; but the truth was, that every advantage was taken of his necessitous post-tion, regardless of the shotates of justice. The con-firmation of the jughire to Lord Clive, with reser-he writes, in his grand-bashaw style, "for their ser-he writes, in his grand-bashaw style, "for their sersion to the company in perpetuity, was exacted from the emperor; and in thus obtaining a boon for his employers, Clive was far from being uninfluenced by sellish motives; for, on coming to India, he was distinetly told that the strict observance of his pladgeof refraining from every description of irregular gain -should be acknowledged in a manner which must entisfy the expectations even of a man who, after a most extravagant course of expenditure, had still on other irregular gains for purely private purposes, income of £10,000 a-year. And when, on his return to England, the term of the jaghire was extended duct of many favoured officers in continuing to re-

appendinged, the end, the authories of fasting an opportunity for reducing the stipped, sices and constant attention upon my person."-(iii., 136.) On his arrival in India he at once embarked largely in the salt trade, and thereby realised in nine months a profit, including interest, of fortyfive per cent.; his share in the monopoly of salt, established in defiance of the repeated orders of the company, was also greatly beyond that of any indi-sidual; and it is certain he employed these and

Bengal previdency ded not assume a leftier bore name of a servant of the powerful tone of feeling in questions regarding re- l'uglish company, supplied the youths with bown or marchly under the amplies of immense sums of money, and committed lord. The priestly office was not "such acts of sidence and opprecion as his then dreined independent with increatible interest prompts him to." It may be re-parally; and the saving of reals gave incombered that Clive commenced his own place to the engreeing cures of money. Indian career by getting into debt; and making. As to the general state of s virty, there is reach to believe that for all the Clive's can account affords abundant evil proceedings mentioned by him in the above denoted it explitude with which endets and ignotation, the company's remants might writers, fresh from public schools, or, it may have pleated his landship's conduct in exto fain the pure strateglers of a quiet tenuation of their want home, plunged lead up into a career of After the departure of Clive, a relect extravagance and notorious profiners, of examinate continued, by his advice, to pro- which the least resulting description would sale over the affairs of Bengal, the chair of have made their mothers sicken with discort, like povernor being filled by Mr. Verebt One walk about Calcutta would, it appears, Juntil Describer, 1770. During the adminwiffice to show a stranger that the youngest intration of this pentleman and his tempo-menties lived in splendid style, which Lord rary services it. Mr. Cortier, no changes Chroexplants, by saying tithat they recense in more mode in the system of the followle the grating Arabian horses, and its palant processment?" that is to say, of a snay quite and charges that they keep veraphos, corried on in the name of a nabib, but in risk e entertainments, and treat with characteristy by English officials. Mill forcibly toget and closer, "to-the certain would bring, describes the inter-mant of any efficient to become over local and ears in debt to extern, or of well-known and princially rethe tanyan, or native agent, who, for the eigened laws, which formed the prevailing while greening after they had here required to a good pleasure good had below the fine for materfully a servett and in the plant had been required to a great to the first had below of the first had been required to a great to the first had been required to a great to the first had been required to a great to the first had been required to a great to the first and proved more from Briward to plant a great to the first had been required to the first had writed to hinde proceedings in the first had been required to the first had been required to the first had been required to the first had been from the f guine a convenience of infimities of ego, on intermed in her well- peacity to he nature for he Confidence of the selection of the test to the patence of the selection of the se pute hare on the instance of Lawrence to knot all liberals success, the entential the allemance magnet were remarkable exidence of a true ideas the production. area remarkant expendent a rive direct Conjunity in. The directes of three or five the card points each to his five direct, with an injury, a with a very as anomals possible, for they had no time to hear fully 101), exists a strong desire to get them established. The princely estates pursuased by him in various parte et the eventry, were no diegnard mante festation's of his extentations prode of lifet among then may be named the nelle property of Caremont feltales I from the Darhett of Newcortle), Walter,

It is barily promary to remark that the feake of obtaining the carer afforded by the materially effectable post e authorings of the physical from - 12" It edie Hy his own hardin Nov., 1774, havlegrewh entered has the ethyrano-(Malcolm's Life.) Clare's aperth on East Indian Indianter Hill, March, 1722--(Hanrard's Farl, Met., 1855.)

A We Free ch. traveleter of the Sugar of Matal. Lerin tal a use in the estate of the Bengal presitheory at 1 well arguainted with Clive, to whom he ereas maily veted as Interpreter) explains a fireitle detuniciation by Wholam Hussein, of the conduct of sertain pers us who were tempted by the devil to Lring disprace on families, as an allusion to the sielation of all decorum committed by Meer Jaffler, in pixing to Clien "ten handeome wemen out of his Lord Chatham's former resides coat Rath, and a house seraphose that is, out of Surajah Dowlah's." Had the in Berkeley-equare. No description of expense was shoution been conferred on a good Musualman, inspired to render these aristocratic duellings fitting stead of a dichelieser in the Keran, the sin would, it exponents of the prandour of the historicallocanoires seems, have been thereby preatly diminished.—(Siyar and the smaller accessories of picture galleries and all Mutakkerin, i., 722.)

feature of this period. The native tribunals retained searce the shadow of authority; the trade of the country was almost ruined by the oppressions committed on the people; and the monopoly of the inland traffic in salt, betel-nut, and tobaceo, when at length unwillingly relinquished by the English officials, did not prove the relief to the Bengalee merchants that might have been expected, owing to the heavy pressure of tyranny and extortion to which they were subjected. In fact, there were so many channels by which the natives could be wronged and the company plundered, that closing up one or two might change the direction of the flood, but could not diminish its volume. Clive was naturally unwilling to acknowledge how much of the task for which he had been munificently rewarded had been left unfulfilled; and it was not till after long and bitter experience that the E. I. Cy. learned to appreciate, at their proper value, his exaggerated account of the revenues* obtained through his aggressive policy. And here it may be well to pause and consider for a moment the nature of our position in Bengal, and, indeed, in the whole of the south of India. The insatiable ambition of Aurungzebe had urged him onwards without ceasing, until every Mohammedan kingdom in the Deeean had become absorbed in the Mogul empire. The impolicy of this procedure has been before remarked on. The tottering base forbade the extension of an already too weighty superstructure; but the emperor persevered to the last. Beejapoor and Golconda fell before him, and the governments established by their usurping dynasties were swept off by a conqueror who had time to destroy institutions, but not to replace The result was the rapid rise of the many-headed Malıratta power, and the equally rapid decay of Mogul supremacy, even while Aurungzehe, his sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons were all in arms together for its support. The death of the emperor, well night hunted down by the foes who from despising he had learned to hate, followed as it was hy repcated wars of succession and intestine feuds, reduced his descendants, step by step, until their last representative, Shah Alum, became nothing better than the pageant of every successful party. The disastrous battle of Paniput (1761) left the Mahratta state thoroughly unhinged, and, together with internal strife, incapacitated its rulers for assuming that dominant position in India under which such men as Sevajce, Bajec Rao, or the first peishwa, Maharashtra, would doubtless have aspired. In fact, India in the middle of the eighteenth century, resembled, in a political point of view, a vast battle-field strewn with the fragments of ruined states, and affording on every side abundant cvidence of a prolonged and severe conflict, from which even the victors had emerged irretrievably injured. In the Decean this was especially the ease; and the only relies of legitimate power rested with a few small Hindoo states (Tanjore, Mysoor, Coorg, &e.), whose physical position or insignifieance had enabled them to retain independence amid the general erash of monarchies. The representatives of the E. I. Cy. in India understood the state of affairs, but very imperfeetly: it appears that, in 1756, they did not even clearly know who Ballajce Bajee Rao (the actual ruler of the Mahratta state) might be; but at the same time, they had been too long anxious spectators of the proceedings of Aurungzebe and his successors, to be ignorant of the thoroughly disorganised state of the empire. The successful manœuvres of Dupleix and Bussy must have sufficed to remove any lingering doubt on the subject; while the jealousy of the two nations in Europe rendered it cvident, that in the absence of a native power (Mussulman or Hindoo) sufficiently strong to compel their neutrality, a contest for supremacy must, sooner or later, take place between the French and English, especially as the former had all along assumed political pretensions ill at variance with the peaceful pursuits of trade. Without entering on the difficult question of the general proceedings of the English company, far in the world, where the power of the English had become absolute, where no inferior approached his superior but with a present in his hand, where there was not an officer commanding H.M. fleet, nor an officer commanding H.M. army, nor a governor, nor a member of council, nor any other person, civil or military, in such a station as to have connection with the country government who had not received prepressions and tricky policy of Chic and his or in part, appropriated; and the investsuccessors, it seems, nevertheless, of absolute ments continued to diminish alike in quantity necessity to bear in mind the hopeless com- and quality. The British government had plication of affairs through which Anglos before set forth a claim to control both Indian statesmen had to grope their may at ithe resenues, and territorial arrangements this critical period; nor do I feel any income of India. The subject was warmly consistency, after employing the best years of tested in parliament; and in 1767, a hill ry life in pleading - faintly and feebly, but passed obliging the E. I. Cy. to pay the m steamestly—the rights of native British rum of A 100,000 per annum into the subjects for in such by the sword, in axon- public treasury, thining the five years for inc, in the present instance, my estraction, which close their exclusive privileges were that having once taken a decided course by the formally extended. In 1769, a new term of deposition of Surajah Dawlah, it would have five years was granted, on the same conbeen better to have an account on conflipment, I differ no that above stated, with the addiin non- are in twolity, ever Bengal, and given I troud supplation of annually exporting Brithe natives the benefits they were entitled this manufactures to the amount of £300,0% to expect under a Ciristian personnent, and appearls. The directors, in the following it stood of morning their Lopes by Thomp Jean (1770), declared a dualend at the rate en the mounted a Mussianna marger of of twelve percent; but this improvident pro-infactors of exector, melepology reportation, endure next taken in the face of a failing reveat distinct is death out in one the pretence the and an increasing debt. In the Carnetic, in the pers n of his illeritimate con. Such the sibulened pledge of compension with an unworthy subterfuse would answer toof the Nixam had brought the Madras presigood purposes at could decribe no one-dency in rellision with Hyder Ali; and in certainly to it the European potentiments of Dougal, affairs given now and more involved, by sin, Pertugal, Heliand, and I truncer must the necessity for a change of policy for they were severally experienced actors became exident to save the country from in the theater of exential policy. The nature from and the company from bankruptey. per dist. It know, to their east, that ell eval. Mr. Vansittart (the eventuernor), Mr. Scraf-nuthernty was now verted in the English ton, and Colonel Funde, were sent out in previdency; but its members were for ton 1769, to investigate and arrange the business experts employed in gathering up up it if for it the three providencies; but this measure themselves, to head the error of the poor in proved of no effect; for the Auctor frigate, Bengal, or the remonstrations of the com- in which they called, after doubling the Cope pany in England. The consequence was, of Goest Hupe, was never more heard of, and the "middle-men" respect on abundant hare probably foundered at sex, west, headless of the common effects of their . The less of Mr. Vansittart was a new negligence and senality alike on those they disaster to the native population of Bengal, served as d those they governed. The direct since be well know the ruleous condition to tion in London, longed up by the represent which they had been reduced by the hancful intions of Clive, and the flattering promises influence of the monopoles so cracily en-of their servents abroad, augmented their forced by his countrymen; and notwithdividends, folly expecting to find this step standing the percent proceedings of Clive, justified by largely increasing remittances and his adherents in the E. I. House in from India. On the contrary, the anarchy are ciating with him as fellow-commiswhich presailed, and the additional expenses somer his snorn for, Luke Scrafton, still of every department of government, with the some comprehensive measure might have aboves that crept in, anallowed up the distance expected to have been decised by a minishing receives; and though every ship man generally considered hind-hearted, to brought home individuals who had amassed relieve the overwhelming misery in which

* In addressing the House of Commons, in 1772, Clive described Bengal as "a country containing fifteen millions of inhabitants, a revenue of £4,000,000, and trade in proportion." The extreme distress then existing he treated as a temporary effect of dissen-sions in the company at home, and misgovernment in India, dating of course from his departure; and he spoke of the venality that prevailed, equally among high and low, with a bold assumption of disamong high and low, with a bold assumption of dis-interestedness, deelaring, "that in the richest ecuntry should be more zerupulous."—Almon's Debates, 1772.

less attempting to sindicate the special ng- [bullion sent for the China trade was wholly, wealth as if by magic, yet heavy bills con- he would have found the native population tinued to be drawn on the company; the involved, had he been permitted to reach

*Clive, is allusion to the charges of contractors, the L. L. Cr. themselves proposed to purel ase the extension of their privileges by suffering the who is possible to make a bill, makes a future. During his own administration, he found soldiers gained with the aid of the army and may. The charges had been long park—(Life, iii, 107—25%)

Calcutta in safety. The miseries of a land | lamentations, amidst which arose the voices long a prey to oppression and misgovernment, had been brought to their climax by The rice crops of December, 1768, and August, 1769, were both scanty, and the absence of the heavy periodical rains, usual in October, produced an almost total failure of the harvest carnestly desired in the following December. The inferior crops of grain and pulse ordinarily reaped between February and April, were dried to powder by the intense heat, and Bengal, formerly the granary of India, became the scene of one of the most awful famines on record. Not mercly whole families, but even the inhabitants of entire villages were swept off by this devastating scourge.* The bark and leaves of trees were eagerly devoured by thousands of starving wretches, who therewith strove-too often in vain-to appease the gnawing pangs of hunger, happy if their sufferings did not goad them to seek relief by more unnatural and loathsome means; for the last horrors that marked the siege of the Holy City were not wanting here; the child fed on its dead parent, the mother on her offspring. The people thorities were to blame for this calamity, was thronged the towns in the hope of obtaining succour, the highways were strewed with the corpses of those who had perished by the way, and the streets of Moorshedabad and this was so far from being the case, that, Calcutta were blocked up with the dying and the dead. Day after day the Hooghly rolled down a pestilential freight of mortality, depositing loathsome heaps near to the porticoes and gardens of the English resiregularly employed in removing the rapidly accumulating masses from the public enunciated but not enforcedo-make enorthoroughfares; but the melancholy office proved fatal to all employed in it: exposure to the effluvia was certain death; and during the worst period, dogs, vultures, and jackals were the only scavengers. The hot, unwholesome air was filled with shrieks and tant gains), that the reason for regret was

* The anonymous but well-informed author of English Transactions in the East Indies, published at Cambridge in 1776, states, that the duty laid by Clive on salt was thirty-five per cent.; the previous tax, even under the monopolies established by Mobammedan nabobs, having heen only two-and-a-half. He adds, that the five gentlemen who signed resolutions regarding trading monopolies in India, to levy taxes upon necessaries of more than one-third their ling price to the people, for their private gain (p. 145); value, instead of the fortieth penny with which they and Dr. Moodie, in his Transactions in India (pubvalue, instead of the fortieth penny with which they were before charged, were all, on their return to England, chosen as members of parliament to co-operate in arranging the national assessments.—(143.)

† Vide Siyar ul Mutakherin, ii., 438. Hamilton's Gazetteer, i., 214. Macaulay's Clive, 83.

of tender and delicate women, nurtured in all the refinements of oriental seclusion, who now came forth unveiled, and on their knees besought a handful of rice for themsclves and their children.+

Large subscriptions were raised by the presidency, the native government, and individuals of all ranks and countries. Moorshedabad alone, 7,000 persons were fed daily for several months; and fearful scenes, involving the destruction of large numbers of the weak and the aged, took place at these distributions, from the fierce struggles of the famished multitudes. Of the total amount of life destroyed by this calamity, no trustworthy estimate has ever been given.‡ Mr. Hastings-perhaps the best authority—supposes Bengal and Bahar to have lost no less than half their inhabitants: other writers state the depopulation at one-third; and even the lowest calculations place the loss at three million of human beings-or one-fifth the inhabitants of the three provinces (including Orissa.)

The question of how far the Bengal auwarmly discussed in England. Their accusers went the length of attributing it wholly to a monopoly of rice by them; but with the exception of the necessary measure of storing a sufficient quantity (60,000 maunds) for the use of the army, all trading in grain was strictly forbidden by an order of council in September, 1769. If, as was For a time a set of persons were asserted, certain functionaries did - as is very possible, in defiance of prohibitions, mous profits of hoards previously accumulated, these were but exceptional cases; and it may be added (without any attempt to exculpate those who, in the face of misery so extreme, could hargain coolly for exorbiquoted, concurs with many writers of the period in asserting, that some of the company's agents, finding themselves conveniently situated for the collection of rice in stores, did buy up large quantities, which they so managed as to increase immensely the selllished anonymously in London in 1776, but of which a copy bearing his name, with many MS. additions, is in the possession of the E. I. Cy.), mentions the case of a needy English functionary at the court of the nabob, who made £60.000 in a few months.

† Gleig's Life of Warren Hastings, i., 309. Malcolm's Clive, iii., 253. Grant's Sketch, 319. § The author of English Transactions, recently

not that some few persons had had the violent measures inlopted to keep up the for the right to make provision for the day of revenues, especially by no assessment termed want, but that a policy of evident necessity majay, "a tax (in a word) upon the survivors, should have been neglected by the inters of a to make up the deficiencies of the dead."; population meinly dependent for subsistence [Besides this, when the immense and alicoon an arconium a staple as rice. The true lutely incalculable amount of specie excause of complaint against the Bengal period, from the time of the deposition of arcodrary-and it is a heavy one-rests on Surajah Dowlah to the epoch of the famine, the systematic appreciant and after miss lisemphered in connexion with the notorious g acriment which their own two the reveal [deficiency of the envoluting medium, and as having existed, despite the orders of the the above and erroneous policy connected directors in England. There again, descived with the coinage, it is easy to understand by the great evaporate us of Clive, looked flow fearfully scarrity of money must have upon Bergal as a fountain fed by unseen laggravated the reils of failing harvests; and simps, from which wealth, to an immental how, when rice rose from a standard of extent, wight be perpensilly drawn, without price (already permanently augmented the return of any considerable proposition to under British supremacy to four, six, and the country from whence it was derived, even ten times the usual ratel, it became of Clave, during his see ad administration, had flittle importance to the panuless multitudes promised the someony which mome from pulether it might or might not be purchosed. Bearnd of £23,000 per amount, exclusive for a certain sum, when all they had in the of all civil or nations distancements; and provide fell short of the market value of a Le declared in parliament, in 1772, that isingle meal. In limitand, the rates of labour India continued to yield "a clear produce are always more or less influenced by the to the public, and to individually of between price of providing; but when the Benjal two and they will be stelling per amount." Increhents endeavoured to raise the manu-It is certain that the Bengal investment facturing standard, their attempts were of 1771, amounting in goods alone to come foughly put down by the local authori-4768,140, was trelofly quickard with the tier, who well knew that Indian goods, revenues of the country, and without imalipurchand at a premium consistent even

Materials Interest Conservation 55.
 Vendata State of Large Land 55.
 God of Este of Warren Harrings 2, 716.

(A er town they Very allowance, tendent of the ende form 1707 to 1771, it is orthorwholest or you sell, that the P. L. Cy, as I they erread to receive blood tween twenty nine or by thats million exterior from tween the error was a state of a state of the life and must be for a state of the life and must be like and the life and t Levlinge, 2014 Of the street at these state to the e organist persoland proving awaited for a million, or table or a course to up warder of five and dealed as greater to. ; which were, bowerer, but one firmed what Cone termed the inferior track of frauds at for the cration many dispuse of pergulation witch excussly been the free to purify assumpts, where extended many more Plate red and Lake of Clier, ite, by Life of Hadren. 1, 500. No extracte x all be formed of the fire tures that recar dated, because the problems of the direction to set I are interest home, careed a a certain Point I encourt. By I like drawn on their in Deglard, led Class at I trough to body of efficient while at a humble ellers the fillowed in the firetategue to insect their wealth in the purchase of diamonds. er to transport and come through the proflum of the Dutch and Presch compules, by all ch means these infector settlements had money in abundance, while porting a simple course of subserfaces feet with a Bengalee's humble notion of a "fair which aloudrently configure the declaration of day's wages for a fair day's work," would Hastings,—that the sufferings of the people, and, when a ld in the European markets, during the famine, were increased by the judemnify the company for prime cost, for ling to exical will fall along to grow eap to wice this ill we est linguistics. trkend oal in some of freats. Among the elaspes to op't and ret Clar, whome exem tell before parish. mention 1912, were from to in the exchange and the g Berrage. As riding in Periodic be there in was used in Ir has a late or use. It I and Colonel Lingue, one one extracted this presence, somethe, that up to a very late percental only of extreme so his in the exists of Eccia was a small gold farson, worth about e agone - (c. 355.) birtie then, he werer, peld have ing been extirely superioded by silver, mercures were ir structed to bring the firmer again into circula-thing or ben the rem to large Clive received a beary persecutive, is poserier. The librated bankers— support he t and his brother—had introduced a tax end the allier currency disting the short reign of Surgan D without by the Roylinh very ingreperly religied. It some sted in liquing coins called sicca rupers, every year, at five times their actual value, and instance in the resenues being pold in this evin enly, during the period of its arbitrary value-that is, during the year of cointyre. In three years it and to the actual value of the allers but its posseems, so payment of three per cent, might have it reer is ed into a new eleca rupee of the original exagperated value. Vide Dow's account of this ingenious rethod of yearly "robbing the public of three per inferior settlements had money in abundance, while tent, upon the preater part of their current species," the insectionness to Calcutta were often procured by —(History of Hindorston, L., Introduction, p. extriil.)

duties and other expenses, exclusive of the profit, which is the originating motive of all commercial associations. Now, it is a wellknown fact, that many men who, in their private eapacity, would sooner face ruin thau infliet it on the innocent, will, as members of a senate or corporation (under the influence of a vague notion of state-necessity or the good of proprietors, whose interests it is their acknowledged duty to consult), institute proceedings of a character utterly opposed to the simple principles of action which guide them in the daily intercourse of domestic life. Flagrant wrong they shrink from with unaffected disgust; but still there are few men who do not, with strange inconsistency, manifest by their practice that public affairs require a constant sacrifice of integrity to expediency, which once admitted as justifiable in their private career, must inevitably destroy the mutual confidence which forms the basis of that distinguishing national characteristic—an English home. The ignorance of the E. I. Cy. of the actual state of affairs (in great to, had ample grounds for instituting an inmeasure the result of the newness of their position), was doubtless the leading cause of which, notwithstanding its immense trading their suffering the continuance of many unquestionably faulty practices, from the difficulty of providing efficient substitutes. The course of events was well fitted to teach them the great lesson-that there is no course so dangerous to rulers as a persistance in tyranny and misgovernment. The misery of the mass, aggravated by the shameless extortions of English functionaries, necessitated a large increase of military expenses: * taxes were literally enforced at the point of the bayonet; "bur-jaut," or the compulsory sale of articles at less than their actual cost, became a notorious praetice; and, simultaneous with these iniquitous proceedings in India, were the pecuniary involvements of the company in London; and, what was yet more disgraceful, the fierce strife between the proprietors and directors, and again between both these and his majesty's ministers. While the sums obtained from Meer

Jaffier and Cossim Ali were in process of payment, the affairs of the company went on smoothly enough: annual supplies were furnished for the China trade, and likewise for the Madras presidency (which was always in difficulties, notwithstanding the various sums obtained from Mohammed Ali, the nabob of Arcot), while five lacs or more were yearly drawn by the Bombay presidency.† The dividend of the E. I. Cy., from Christmas, 1766, to Midsummer, 1772, averaged cleven per cent. per annum; during the lastnamed year it had reached twelve-and-ahalf per eent., and this notwithstanding the stipulated payment to government of £400,000, in return for the continuance of the charter. Meantime the bouded debt of Bengal increased from £612,628, in 1771, to £1,700,000, in 1772; and the company, though most unwillingly, were obliged to throw themselves upon the mercy of the ministry (of which the Duke of Grafton and Lord North were at the head), and confess their utter inability to furnish their annual quota; and further, their necessity of soliciting from the Bank of England a loan of above a million sterling to carry on the commercial transactions of the ensuing season.

The government, thus directly appealed quiry into the condition of an association and territorial revenues, had again become reduced to the verge of bankruptcy. It was argued, that the bitter complaints of venality and mismanagement, freely reciprocated by the directors and the servants of the company, were, on hoth sides, founded in truth. Moreover, the representations made on behalf of Mohammed Ali by his agents, particularly Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Macpherson, had considerable effect, not only generally in producing au unfavourable opinion of the dealings of the E. I. Cy. with Indian princes, but specially by inducing the sending to Arcot of a royal ambassador, Sir John Lindsay, and sub-sequently of Sir Robert Harland, hetween both of whom and the local government the most open hostility existed. These proceedings have had too little permaneut effect to need being detailed at length, but they illustrate the state of feeling which led to the parliamentary investigations of 1772, and resulted in the first direct counexion of the ministry with the management of East Indian affairs, by the measure commonly known as the Regulating Act of 1773. A loan was granted to the company of £1,400,000 in exchequer bills,‡ and various

Dow asserts, that "seven entire battalions were added to our military establishment to enforce the collections."—(Hindoostan, i., cxxxix.)

[†] Original Papers, sent from India and published in England by Governor Vansittart .- (ii., 74.) The conditions of the loan were, that the sur-

connected therewith, was exercised by him in the name of the young prince, Jewan Bukht, the eldest son of Shah Alum, who had been left behind at the period of his father's flight in 1758. The encroachments of the Jat Rajah, Sooraj Mull, into whose hands Agra had fallen after the hattle of Paniput, in 1761, resulted in a regular conflict between him and Nujceb-oo-Dowla, in 1764. The rajah was killed at the very commencement of hostilities; and the endeavour of his son and successor, Jowher Sing, to prosecute the war by the assistance of the Mahratta chieftain, Mulhar Rao Holcar, proved ineffectual. In 1769, the peishwa's army crossed the Chumbul, and after desolating Rajast'han and levying arrears of chout from the Rajpoot princes, they proceeded to overrun the country of nominal servant, but most grasping and rethe Jats, which at this time extended from Agra to the borders of Delhi on the northwest, and near to Etawa on the south-east, and afforded a revenue of nearly £250,000. The Mahrattas gained a decided victory near Bhurtpoor, and made peace with the Jats on condition of receiving a sum of about £75,000. They then encamped for the monsoon, intending at its expiration to enter Rohilcund, and revenge on the leading chiefs the part played by them in concert with the Afghan victor at the bloody field of Paniput. Nujeeh-oo-Dowla took advantage of the interval to negotiate a treaty on behalf of himself and the Rohillas in general; and his overtures were favourably received, on account of the mutual need each party had of the other to obtain an object desirable in the sight of hoth, the withdrawal of the emperor from the immediate influence of the English, and his re-establishment The arrangement was marred by the death of Nujeeh-oo-Dowla, at the elose of 1770. His son, Zabita Khan, who appears to have inherited the amhition, unehecked hy the loyalty or prudence of his father, assumed the charge of affairs, and showed no inclination to procure the return of his liege lord. In the following year, Rohilcund was overrun hy the Mahrattas; the strong fortress of Etawa fell into their hands; Delhi was seized hy them, and Zabita Khau fled to Seharunpoor, the capital of his own patrimony in Rohilcund.

* Etal Rao ay encamped on the banks of the Jumna, when the emperor (then heir-apparent) fied from Delhi. He received the fugitive with the utmost kindness .- swore on the holy waters of the Ganges not to betray him; and more than redeemed | Auber's British Power in India, i., 287

The prince, Jewan Bukht, was treated with marked respect, and the emporor given to understand, that if he did not think fit to accept the repeated invitations made to him to return to his capital, his son would be formally placed on the throne. In an evil hour, Shah Alum yielded to a natural desire of taking possession of the scanty remains of imperial power which formed his illomened inheritance. The darkest hour he had hitherto encountered had afforded him experience of the fidelity of a Mahratta general;* nor does there seem to have been any sufficient reason for his anticipating the mercenary and unprincipled conduct which he eventually received at their hands, which, however, never equalled in treachery the proceedings of his professed friend and lentless foe, Shuja Dowlah, the 'cherished ally of the English. In fact, the insidious counsels and pecuniary aid furnished hy this notable schemer, were mainly instrumental in resolving Shah Alum to quit Allahabad, which he did after receiving from the Bengal presidency a strong assurance "of the readiness with which the company would receive and protect him, should any reverse of fortune compel him once more to return to his provinces."† The commander-in-chief (Sir Rohert Barker) and Shuja Dowlah attended the royal march to the frontier of the Corah district, and then took leave with every demonstration of respect and good-will; the latter declaring that nothing hut the predominant influence of the Mahrattas at court prevented his proceeding thither and devoting himself to the performance of the duties of the vizierat. Shah Alum reached Delhi in Dccember, 1771, and entered its ancient gates amid the acclamations of the populace. Happily, his enjoyment of this gleam of prosperity was unmarred by a knowledge of the almost unexampled miseries which awaited him during the chief part of the ensuing six-and-twenty years. Could but a passing glimpse of coming sorrows have been foreshadowed to him, the lowliest but in Bengal would have seemed a blessed refuge from the agonies of mind and body he and his innocent family were doomed to endure within the stately walls of their ancestral home.

his pledge, in spite of threats and bribes, by guarding the prince for six months, and then escorting him to a place of safety.—(Francklin's Shah Alum.)
† Official Letter from Bengal, 31st August, 1771.

The Bombay Presidency, so far as its | found opportunity; and the commanders of finances were concerued, continued to be a heavy tax on the E. I. Cy., the net revenue and military expenditure.*

In the Madras Presinency, events had taken place which the superior importance and interest of Bengal affairs have preveuted from being noticed in ehrouological succession. Reference has been made to the ill-feeling which sprang up between the E. I. Cy. and Mohammed Ali (the) nabob of their own nomination.) The cause was twofold-first, the English expected to find the province, of which Arcot was the capital, a mine of wealth, and hoped to derive from the nabob, when firmly established there, considerable pecuniary advan-They soon discovered their mistake as to the amount of funds thus obtainable, and still more with regard to the expenditure of life and treasure to be incurred in establishing the power of a man who, though of very inferior capacity, was inordinately ambitious, and yet distrustful—not perhaps without cause—of the allies, by whose assistance alone his present position could be maintained, or his views of aggrandisement The chief points in the longcarried out. continued hostilities, undertaken by the presidency to enforce his very questionable claims to sovercignty or tribute, may be briefly noted, nor can the painful admission in justice be withhold—that many expeditions dispatched under the auspices of Mr. (afterwards Lord) Pigot, whatever their ostensible motive, were really prompted by a desire to replenish a treasury exhausted by military expenses, especially by the long war with the French, which commenced in 1746, and terminated with the reduction of Pondicherry in 1761. The miseries of the native population must have heen too great to admit of much increased exaction. Since its first invasiou by Aurungzebe,† the Carnatic had been, almost without interruption, the scene of rapine and discrganisation; imperial agents, usurping nabobs, and ehout-collecting Mahrattas had elaimed revenues, and exacted contributions, as each districts and forts maintained their often illgotten authority, by resisting or complying not sufficing to defray a third of its civil with the demands made upon them, according to the urgency of the case. But the great load of suffering fell ever on the unarmed and inoffensive peasantry, whose daily sustenance was to be procured by daily work. This suffering was not of a character peculiar to the epoch now under consideration: it would seem that, from time immemorial, the working classes of Hindoostan had practically experienced the scourge of war; for every one of the multifarious languages of the peninsula has a word answering to the Canarese term Wulsa, which, happily, cannot be explained in any European tongue without considerable eircumlocution. The Wulsa denotes the entire population of a district, who, upon the approach of a hostile army, habitually bury their most cumbrous effects, quit their beloved homes, and all of them, even to the child that can just walk alone, laden with grain, depart to seek shelter (if, happily, it may be found) among some neighbouring community blessed with peace. More frequently the pathless woods and barren hills afford their sole refuge, until the withdrawal of the enemy enables them to return to cultivate anew the devastated fields. exile must be always painful and auxious: during its continuance the weak and aged dic of fatigue; if long protracted, the strong too often perish by the more dreadful pangs of hunger. Colonel Wilks affirms, that the Wulsa never departed on the approach of a British army, when unaccompanied by Indian allies; but this is poor comfort regarding the measures taken on behalf of Mohammed Ali, since there is no reason to suppose his troops more scrupulous than their fellows, or less feared by the unhappy peasantry. The fort and district of Vellore were captured for him, in 1761, from Murtezza Ali, with the assistance of the English, after a three months' siege; but the treasure taken there ill repaid the cost of the conquest. The latter part of 1763, and nearly the whole of the following twelve-

In the Report of Select Committee, June, 1784, the net revenue of Bombay for the year ending April, 1774, is stated at £109,163; civil and military charges, £347,387: leaving a deficiency of £238,224.

† During the nineteen years preceding the death of Aurungzebe, in 1707, his favourite general, Zulfeccar Khan, was employed in the Carnatic in cease-less and destructive hostilities; and it is recorded that ninetecn actions were fought, and 3,000 miles marched by this officer in six months only. Famine and postilence—the direct consequences of prolonged and systematic devastation—followed, and even exceeded in their ravages the scourge of war. The terrible sufferings of the people, during this melancholy period, are affectingly described in many of the memoins comprised in the valuable Mackenzie collection.

† Wilks History of Mysocr, i., 309.

§ See previous pages, especially Note †, p. 252.

months, were taken up in a struggle with separation from the French, in 1760, his Mohammed Esoof, a brave and skilful road to eminence had been short and sanofficer, who had long and faithfully served guinary. Force and fraud, used indifthe English as commandant of sepoys. He | ferently, according to the nature of the had been placed in command of Madura, as renter; but the unproductive condition of the country rendered it, he declared, impossible to pay the stipulated sum. The excuse is believed to have been perfectly true; but it was treated as a mere cloak to cover an incipient attempt at independence. An army marched upon Madura, and Esoof, fairly driven into resistance, commenced a desperate contest, which occasioned heavy loss of life on the side of the English, and the expenditure of a million sterling, before hostilities terminated by the seizure and betraval of his person into the hands of Mo-hammed Ali, by whom he was condemned to die the death of a rebel, and actually executed as such.

His betrayer was a man named Marchand, who had joined him among a body of French troops sent to his aid by the Mahratta rajah of Tanjore, from whom a heavy sum had recently been extorted on the plea of arrears of tribute due to the general government of the Carnatic. The acquisition of the Northern Circars, in 1766, and the treaty made by Lord Clive with Nizam Ali, has been noticed, as also the impolicy of engaging to hold a body of troops in readiness to do the will of so belligerent and unserupulous a leader. It was not long before the fulfilment of this pledge was insisted on, and the immediate consequence proved the commeneement of a long and disastrons series of wars with Hyder Ali. Since his sudden

. The districts of Great and Little Balipoor were included in the province of Sera: the former was held as a jaghire by Abhas Kooli Khan, the persecutor of Hyder in childhood. Bassalut Jung wished to exclude this territory from that over which he assumed the right of investing Hyder with authority,-(a right, says Wilks, which could noly be inferred from the act of granting); but the latter declared the arrangement at an end, if any interference were attempted with the gratification of his long-smouldering revenge. Abbas Kooli Khan fled to Madras, leaving his family in the hands of his bitter foe; but , tended doom by means of a humane artifice practised Hyder showed himself in a strangely favourable light; for in remembrance of kindness bestowed on him in childhood by the mother of the fugitive, he never entertained the least belief of the truth of the treated the captives with lenity and honour. This story; and the whole army treated the absenturer conduct did not, however, embolden Abbas Kooli to quit the protection of the English, or throw himself on his mercy; and, some years later (in 1769), when Hyder presented himself at the gates of Madras, he embarked in a crazy vessel, and did not senture to land until the hostile force had reascended the mountain-passes.—(Wilks Mysor, i., 410.)

obstacle to be overcome, had raised Hyder to the supreme authority in Mysoor; and a skilful admixture of the same ingredients, enabled him gradually to acquire possession of many portions of Malabar and Canara, until then exempt from Moslem usurpation. The strife at one period existing between Nizam Ali aud his elder brother, Bassalut Jung, induced the latter to make an attempt at independence, in prosecution of which he marched, in 1761, against Sera,* a province seized by the Mahrattas, and separated by them from the government of the Deecan, of which it had previously formed a part. The resources of Bassalut Jung proving quite insufficient for the projected enterprise, he gladly entered into an arrangement with Hyder Ali; and, on receiving five lacs of rupees, made over his intention of conquering Sera to that chief, on whom he conferred the title of nabob, together with the designation of Khan Bahadur-"the heroic lord." Sera was speedily subdued, and its reduction was followed, in 1763, by the seizure, on a most shameless pretext, of Bednore, a territory situated on the loftiest crest of the Ghants, 5,000 feet above the level of the sea, abounding in magnificent forests, and fertilized by copions rains, which produce harvests of remarkable abundance. The sequestered position of this little kingdom, had hitherto preserved it from Mohammedan invasion, and enabled successive rulers to accumulate leaving an adopted heir, of about reventeen years of age, under the guardianship of his widow. The youth animadverted with severity on the conduct of the rance, with regard to a person named Nimbela, and the result was his own assassination by a jet'i or athlete, who watched an opportunity to dislocate his neck while employed in shampooing him in the bath. The guilty rance selected an infant to fill the vacant thone; but, about five years after, a pretender started up, claiming to be the rightful heir, and describing himself as having escaped the inby the athlete. Hyder readily availed himself of the pretext for invading Bednore, though Le probably story; and the whole army treated the adventurer with the utmost derision, styling him the "Rajsh of the resurrection." So soon as Beliance was esptured, Hyder, setting aside all conditions or stipulations previously entered into, sent the raree and Ler paramour, with his own pro by , to a con non pris in nd until the hostile force had reasonded the in the hill-first of Mulglerry, whence they were ountain-passes—(Wilk' Mysoor, i., 440.)

† The last actual rajah of Bednore died in 1755, in 1767. The ratee died directly effect her release.

much treasure. The mountain eapital (eight miles in eircumference) fell an easy prey to the Mysoorean ehief; "and the booty realised may," says Colonel Wilks, "without the risk of exaggeration, be estimated at twelve million sterling, and was, through life, habitually spoken of by Hyder as the foundation of all his subsequent greatness."* The subjugation of the country was not, however, accomplished without imminent danger to the life of the invader. +

Hyder now assumed the style of an independent sovereign, and struck coins in his own name. Having completed the necessary arrangements for the occupation of the lesser districts included in his new dominions (which comprehended two places often named in the history of early European proceedings on this coast,—Onore and Maugalore), he next seized the neighbouring territories of Soonda and Savanoor, and then rapidly extended his northern frontier almost to the banks of the Kistnah. Here, at length, his daring encroachments were

*History of Mysoor, i., 452. Mill says.—"More likely it was not a third of the sum" (iii., 469); but native testimonies and the reports of the French mercenaries in the service of Hyder, with other circumstances, tend to confirm the opinion of Wilks. In a life of Hyder Ali, written by the French leader of his European troops, whose initials (M.M.D. L.T.) are alone given, it is stated that two heaps of gold, coined and in ingots, and of jewels, set and unset, were piled up until they surpassed the height of a man on horseback. They were then weighed with a corn measure. Hyder gave a substantial proof of the extent of his ill-gotten booty, by bestowing on every soldier in his service a gratuity equal to half a year's pay.—(History of Ayder Ali Khan, Nabob Bahader; translated from the French: Dublin, 1774.)

† The ministers of the late dynasty entered into an extensive conspiracy for his assassination and the recovery of the capital. Some vague suspicions induced Hyder to cause inquiry to be made by his most confidential civil servants. The persons so employed were, strangely enough, all concerned in the plot. They performed their commission with apparent zeal, and read the result to the dreaded despot as he lay on a couch shivering with ague. His keen perceptions were undimmed by bodily infirmity; but affecting to be duped by the garbled statements made by the commissioners, he detained them in consultation until he felt able to rise. Then, entering the durbar, or hall of audience, he examined and cross-examined witnesses until the mystery was quite unravelled. The commissioners were executed in his presence, many unhappy nobles of Bednore arrested, and, before the close of the day, 300 of the leading confederates were lianging at the different public ways of the city. Hyder, we are told, retired to rest with perfect equanimity, and rose on the following morning visibly benefited by the stimulating effect of his late exertions. Peace of mind had, however, arrested by Mahdoo Rao, the young and energetie Mahratta peishwa, who (taking advantage of the accommodation with Nizam Ali, which had succeeded the partial destruction of Poonah by the latter in 1763) crossed the Kistnah, in 1764, with a force greatly outnumbering that of Hyder. A prolonged contest ensued, in which the advantage being greatly on the side of the Mahrattas, and the army of Hyder much reduced, he procured the retreat of the peishwa, in 1765, by various territorial concessions, in addition to the payment of thirty-two laes of rupees. When relieved from this formidable foe, he forthwith commenced preparations for the conquest of Malabar, which he succeeded in effecting after an irregular war of some months' duration with the proud and liberty-loving Nairs, or military east; for the disunion of the various petty principalities neutralised the effects of the valour of their subjects, and prevented any combined resistance being offered. Cananore, t Cochin, Karical-all fell, more or less com-

police system subsequently attained, the dagger of the assassin was an imago never absent from his sleeping or waking thoughts, save when banished hy the stupor of complete intoxication, which became to him a nightly necessity. One of his most inti-mate associates relates, that after having watched over him during a short interval of convulsive sleep, snatched in his tent during a campaign, Hyder exclaimed on awaking-"The state of a yogee (religious mendicant) is more delightful than my envied monarchy: awake, they see no conspirators; asleep, they dream of no assassins."—(Wilks' Mysoor, i., 143.)

the Dutch possessions on the Malabar const had been materially lessened during the interval between the last mention made of them in 1740 (p. 245), and the invasion of Hyder Ali in 1766. The expensive trading establishments maintained there proved a heavy drain on the finances of the company, which Stavorinus, on the authority of Governor Mossel, alleges to have been occasioned by the continual disputes and wars in which they had been engaged with the native princes, "and not a little by the infidelity and peculation of the servants. who have been employed here." Mossel declares, "it would have been well for the Dutch company had the ocean swallowed up the coast of Malabar an hundred years ago." Under these circumstances, the best thing was to get rid of such unfortunate acquisitions. Cranganore was sold to the rajah of Travancore; and Cananore, in 1770, for the sum of 100,000 rapees, to a recently established potentate, styled by Stavorinus the Sultan of Angediva or Anchediva, a little rocky isle, two miles from the coast of North Canara. This chief belonged by birth to the mixed class, the offspring of intercourse (after the Malabar custom) between native women and Arahian immigrants: they bore the significant appellation of Moplah or Mapilla (the children of their mothers); but were mostly believers in the Koran. Ali Rajah, the purchaser of Cananore, had risen by trade to fled from him; and, notwithstanding the terrible the purchaser of Cananore, had risen by trade to perfection which his inquisitorial and sanguinary wealth, and thence to political importance: he took pletely, into the power of Hyder; and Maan tion of the invaders been less absorbed in Veeram Raj, the Zamorin, or Tamuri ra-the accumulation of plunder, they might jah of Calieut, disgusted by the faithlessness | have seized as their prize the whole of these of his unprincipled opponent, and terrified functionaries, and dictated at leisure the by the eruel and humiliating tortures in-terms of general peace and individual rauflieted on his ministers to extort money, set fire to the house in which he was eonfined, and perished in the flames.* Shortly after this event, Hyder was recalled to Seringapatam by the alarming intelligence that the English and Mohammed Ali had united with the Nizam in a confederacy for the reduction of his dangerous Hyder was a complete master ascendancy. of every description of intrigue. He suceeeded, by dint of bribery, in withdrawing Nizam Ali from the alliance into which the English had unwisely entered, and the very corps which had accompanied the Nizam into the dominions of Hyder, sustained in its retreat an attack from their united forces.+ Madras was imperilled by the unlooked-for appearance of 5,000 horse, under the nominal command of Tippoo, the eldest son of Hyder Ali, then a youth of seventeen. The president and conneil were at their gardenhouses without the town; and had the attennn enrly opportunity of propitiating the favour of Hyder, at the expense of the high-born Hindoo princes in his vicinity. When Stavorinus himself visited India, in 1775-'8, the Butch possessions on the Malnbar coast nominally extended a distance of about thirty-two leagues; but, excepting the little island of Paponetty, and a few insignificant villages on the shore, the company had "no other actual property in the soil than in that upon which their fortifications are constructed."—(Stavorinus Toyages, iii., chapters xiii, and xiv.)

2 т

• Several of the personal attendants of the Zamo-

rin being necidentally excluded when the doors were fastened, threw themselves into the flames, and perished with their master. This eatastrophe had no effect in softening the heart of Hyder, or inducing him to show compassion to the ministers. Nairs, rendered desperate by his cruelty, rose against him repeatedly, and were, if captured, either beheaded or hanged, until the idea struck their persecutor of preserving them to populate certain other portions of his dominions. The experiment proved tatal to the majority of the unhappy beings upon whom it was tried; of 15,000 who were subjected to this forced emigration, only 200 survived the faligue and hardships of the way and the change of climate, which Indians in general-and particularly the natives of Malabar-ean ill hear under every possible eircumstance of alleviation .- (Will.s' Mycor, i. 177.)

† Either from generosity or policy, five English companies, attached to the Niram as a guard of honour, were suffered by him to depart and join the force under Colonel Smith three days before the commencement of open hostilities by the new allies.

1 Hyder prevailed on the Niram to give the order to retreat, and was himself clearly perceived by the recent offerent their described and false here. Hinglish issuing directions for that purpose, in the total Hader in decria and retreat property in the midst of a relect body of infantry, whose rearies and much injured pattern, Nurjecty. (Walks)

som. But they delayed until news arrived of a decisive victory gained by Colonel Smith, at Trincomalee, t over Hyder and Nizam Ali, which being closely followed by other advantages on the side of the Euglish (including the successful defence of Amboor), brought the campaign to an end. Hyder retreated within his own frontier, and the Nizam concluded a peace with the English in February, 1768, by which he agreed to receive seven laes per annum for six years, as temporary tribute for the Circars, instead of the perpetual subsidy of nine laes per annum previously promised. Hyder was himself equally solicitous of forming a treaty with the Madras presidency. He did not scruple to avow his inability to oppose at once both them and the Mahrattas; and he candidly arowed that disinclination to make common eause with the latter people, was the leading incentive to his repeated overtures for alliance with the English. His offers were, dresses, with lances eighteen feet long, of bambon, strengthened by hands of polished silver, rendered them no less picturesque in mppearance than for-midable in reality. The retreat was for the moment, delayed by a singular incident. Niram Ali invarinbly earried his favourite wives in his train, even to the field of battle. On the present occasion, directions were given to the drivers of the elephants on which they were seated, to decamp forthwith,-an undignifield procedure, which was firmly opposed by the fair occupant of one of the howdales. "This elephant," she exclaimed, "has not been instructed so to turn; he follows the imperial standard;" and though the English shot fell thick around, the lady waited till the standard passed. A considerable body of car stry, round to action by the sense of shame inspired by this feminine display of chiralry, made a partial charge upon the enemy.—(Wilks' Morer, ii. 38.)

§ The assault lasted twenty-six days, at the experation of which time, the besign dware relieved by the approach of the British army. In homeur of the steady courage there manifested, the 1st I stralion of the 10th regiment hear "the rock of Ambour" en their colours. Hyder had a narrow carage during the enterprise; for while examining the fertilement, under cover of a rock which sheltered him completely from the elirect fire of the fort, a cummeral of rebounded from a mighbouring height, and ent is two his only companien, leaving lam todant. My sourcem court were, occur ling to Col nel Willia. the most unscientific in all lading or the me in cart of the simple principle have help a half we did red one of a mid the rocks which him is the radiance, and its force was spont, Pey attributed the fite of Ribbles Skeli to a mir vele of very contract of the pare of the

however, haughtily rejected. Driven to desperation, he put forth all his powers, ravaged the Carnatic, penetrated to Trichinopoly, laid waste the provinces of Madura and English army, by a series of artful movements, to a considerable distance from Madras, he selected a body of 6,000 cavalry, marched 120 miles in three days, and suddenly appeared on the Mount of Saint Thomas, in the immediate vicinity of the English capital. The presidency were struck with consternation. The fort might undoubtedly have held out till the arrival of the army under Colonel Smith, but the open town with its riches, the adjacent country, and the garden-houses of the officials, would have been ravaged and destroyed; moreover, the exhausted state of the treasury afforded little encouragement to maintain hostilities with a foe whose peculiar tactics enabled him to procure abundant supplies for his troops in a hostile country, and to surround his enemics with

* Hyder, throughout his whole career, displayed a peculiarly teachable spirit in every proceeding relative to his grand object in life—the art of war. Kunde Rao, a Brahmin, carly instructed him in Maliratta tactics; and by their joint endeavours a system of plunder was organised, which Sevajce himself might have admired. The Beder peons (described by Colonel Wilks as "faithful thieves") and the Pindarries (a description of horse who receive no pay, but live on the devastation of the enemy's country), were among the most effective of Hyder's troops. The general arrangement seems to have been, that the army, besides their direct pay, should receive one-half the booty realised; the remainder to be appropriated by their leader; and the whole proceeding was conducted by a series of checks, which rendered the embezzlement of spoil almost impossible. Movcable property of every description, obtained either from enemies or (if practicable without exciting suspicion) hy simple theft from allies, was the object of these marauders;-from convoys of grain, cattle, or fire-arms, down to the clothes, turbans, and earrings of travellers or villagers, whether men, women, or children. Kunde Rao at length became disgusted by the uncontrolled ambition and covetousness of Hyder. Unwilling to see the ancient Hindoo institutions of Myseor swept off by an avowed disbeliever in all religion, he went over to the side of the unfortunate rajah, and was, as before stated, in the hour of defeat delivered up to his fierce and relentless foe, who retained him two years exposed in an iron cage in the most public thoroughfare of Bangalore; and even when death at length released the wretched captive, left his bones to whiten there in memory of his fate. (See Wilks' History of Mysoor, i., 434, the French Life of Ayder, and Dr. Moodie's Transactions in India devastation and scarcity in the heart of their own domains.* A treaty was concluded with him in April, 1769, of which the principal conditions† were a mutual restora-Tinnevelly, and finally, after drawing the tion of conquests and a pledge of alliance, defensive but not offensive. The distinction involved in the latter proviso was, as might have been foreseen, of little avail; for the foes against whom Hyder especially desired the co-operation of the English troops, were the Mahrattas, who periodically invaded his territories; and on the expected approach of Mahdoo Rao, he urgently appealed to the presidency for the promised aid, which they withheld on the plea of complicated political relations, and thus excited, with too just cause, the vindictive passions of their ally. The military abilities of the peishwa were of no common order: and he approached with the determination of materially circumscribing the power of a rival whose proceedings and projects, after long undervaluing, he began to appreciate correctly. Seizing one by one the conquestst of Hyder, ceptor in the science of war, and having his picture suspended in the palace of Seringapatam.

Other clauses provided, that the company were to be allowed to build a fort at Onore, and to have the sole right of purchasing pepper in the dominions of Hyder Ali; payment to be made to him in guns, saltpetre, lead, gunpowder, and ready money. The directors strongly reprobated the supply of offensive implements to so dangerous a potentate, and likewise the cannon afterwards sold to him, and the shipping built by his orders,-remarking, that such a procedure could not conduce to the welfare of the presidency, although it might suit the views of individuals.

I The battle of Chercoolce, which occurred while the Mysooreans were retreating to Seringapatam, was attended by some incidents singularly illustrative of the character of Hyder, who, though well able to be courtly on occasion, was habitually fierce in his anger and coarse in his mirth, and in either case equally unaccustomed to place any restraint on his tongue or hand. When under the influence of intoxication, his natural ferocity occasionally broke out in the most unbridled excesses; but he rarely drank deeply, except alone and at night. On the eve of this disastrous battle, the alarms of war prevented him from sleeping off the effects of his usual potation; and in a state of stupid inebriety he sent repeated messages desiring the presence of Tippoo, which owing to the darkness and confusion, were not delivered until daybreak. When Tippoo at length appeared, his father, in a paroxysm of rage, abused him in the foulest language, and snatching a large cane from the hand of an attendant, inflicted on the heir-apparent a literally severe beating. Burning with anger, and smarting with pain, the youth, when suffered to retire, hastened to the head of bis division, and dashed his sword and turban on the ground, of Ayder, and Dr. Moodle's Transactions in Them, from 1756 to 1783, for an account of this almost unexampled act of barbarity.) In his later career, I sweat by Allah and the Prophet, that I draw no Hyder declared, that the English were his chief tutors in military stratagems; and for Colonel Smith he expressed particular respect, calling him his pre- chief round his bead, and assumed the guise of one cession to the throug of Amber or Jeypoor. Pretexts, more or less plausible, were put forth by other Mahratta leaders for the same course of invasion and plunder. state of the Rohillas will be more particularly mentioned in a subsequent page. The far-distant Seiks had gradually increased in number and power, and could now furnish 80,000 men fit to bear arms. They possessed all the fertile country of the Punjaub between Sirhind and Attoc.

Administration of Warren Hastings. This celebrated governor superseded Mr. Cartier in the Beugal presidency in April, He had accompanied Mr. Vausittart to England in 1764, and was at that time in the enjoyment of a moderate independence, and a reputation for ability and disinterestedness of no common order. Presidents and counsellors, commanders military and naval-in a word, the whole body of European officials, of any rank in the service—are recorded as having received costly presents from the native princes. In this list the name of Warren Hastings is alone wanting; and as it is certain his position in the court of Meer Cossim must have afforded more than average opportunities for the accumulation of wealth in a similar manner, the exception tends to prove that the love of money formed no part of his "sultanlike and splendid character."* On the con-

* Bishop Heber's Journal (London, 1828), i., 330. † The pedigree of the young writer can, it is affirmed, be traced back to the fierce sca-king, long the terror of both coasts of the British channel, whose subjugation called forth all the valour and perseverance of the great Alfred; and in tracing the political career of the Indian governor, one is tempted to think that not a few of the piratical propensities of Hastings the Dane, were inherited by his remote descendant. The more immediate ancestors of Warren Hastings were lords of the manor of Daylesford, in Worcestershire, and retained considerable wealth up to the time of the civil war in which King Charles I. lost his crown and life, and their existing representative all his possessions, except the old manor house, which being from poverty unable to retain, they sold in the following generation to a London merchant. To regain the ancient home of his family was the aspiration of Warren Hastings, while still a child of seven years old; and the hope which first dawned on his mind as he lay on the bank of the rivulet flowing through the lands of Daylesford to join the Isis, never passed away, but cheered him amid every phase of his chequered career, from the time when he learned his daily tasks on the wooden bench of the village school, or laboured at a higher description of study at the next school to which he was sent, where he was well taught, but so scantily fed, that he always attributed trary, he was generous even to prodigality: by which means, a brief sojourn in England, surrounded by family claims, reduced his finances to a condition little above that in which they had been fifteen years before; when, through the influence of a distant relative in the E. I. direction, the impoverished scion of a noble house had been dispatched, at the age of seventeen, as a writer to Calcutta. There, as we have seen, he had risen from the lowest grade of office to a seat at the council-board, aided by general talent and application to business, but especially by the then rare advantage of acquaintance with the Persian language—the medium through which official correspondence in India was mainly conducted. evidence given by him during the inquiry instituted by parliament in 1766, regarding the system of government adopted by the E. I. Cy., afforded a fair opportunity for the exposition of his views on a subject of which he was well calculated, both by experience and ability, to form a correct opinion; and although the hostility of the Clive party in the India House, prevented—happily for Hastings—his being suffered to accompany his former chief, Mr. Vansittart, in the projected mission to Bengal, no objection was made to his appointment to the station of second in council at Madras, whither he proceeded in 1769. Here his measures transferred to Westminster school, where Churchill, Colman, Lloyd, Cumherland, Cowper, and Impey, were fellow-students. His comrades liked and admired the even-tempered boy, who was the hest of hoatmen and swimmers; and so high were his scholarly acquirements, that upon the sudden death of the uncle, who had placed him at Westminster, Dr. Nicholl, then head-master, offered to hear the expense of sending his favourite pupil to Oxford. But the sending his favourite pupil to Oxford. distant relative on whom the responsibility of the decision devolved, persisted in sending the youth to India, and he was shipped off accordingly. Some seven years after, when about four-and-twenty, he married the widow of a military officer. She soon fell a victim to the climate, leaving Hastings one child, who was sent to England for health and education. The death of this son, to whom he was fondly attached, was the first intelligence received by the hereaved father on his arrival in 1764, and it rendered him more than commonly indifferent to the management of his pecuniary affairs. On leaving Indin, the chief part of his savings remained vested there, the high rate of interest being probably the inducement; but great advantages of this description are usually of n precarious character, and Hastings lost both principal and interest. This calamity did not hinder him from providing liberally for an aunt, for an only and beloved sister, like himself, the offspring of an early and ill-starred marriage, and for to that circumstance his stunted growth and emaciated appearance. From Newington Butts he was ment had to be purchased with borrowed money.

deposition of complaints. In the meanwhile, the Khalsa, or government revenue establishment, was trausferred from Moorshedabad to Calcutta; the office of naibdewan was abolished both for Bengal and Bahar; the British council formed into a hoard of revenue; and a native functionary or assistant dewan, under the old Hindoo title of roy-royan,* appointed to act in the Khalsa, to receive the accounts in the Bengal language, and make reports. The great obstacle to an equitable and satisfactory arrangement of the revenues, was the utter ignorance of the law-makers regarding the tenure of land; hut Hastings, influenced hy the necessity of a speedy decision, and considering it better "to resolve without dcbate, than to debate without resolving," + cut the Gordian knot by determining to let the lands in farm for a period of five years.‡ In many instances, the hereditary Hindoo rulers of districts had sunk into the condition of tributaries, and in that character had been forcibly included by their Moslem eonquerors in the large class of zemindars or middle-men, by whom the village authorities of the old system of numerous independent municipalities were gradually supplanted in Bengal. By the present regulations, when the zemindars, and other middlemen of ancient standing, offered for the lands, or rather land-rents, which they had heen accustomed to manage, terms which were deemed reasonable, they were preferred; when their proposals were considered inadequate, a pension was allotted for their subsistence, and the lands put up for sale—a proceeding which, of necessity, involved the repeated commission of glaring injustice and impolicy; for many men who had nothing to lose were installed, to the expulsion of previous zemindars, who only offered what they eould realise with ease to their tenants (for so these must be called, for want of a proper term to express a false position) and remuneration to themselves. To the ryots, or actual cultivators, leases or titles were given, enumerating all the claims to which they were subject, and prohibiting, under penaltics, every additional exaction. These arrangements, however fair-seeming in theory, were founded on incorrect premises, and proved alike injurious to the interests of the company and the welfare of the people. Regarding the administration of justice, Hastings exerted himself with praiseworthy zeal. Aware of the intention of the home government to take this portion of Indian affairs under their especial consideration, he feared, not without reason, that their deliherations might issue in an endeavour to transplant to India the complicated system of jurisprudence long the acknowledged and lamented eurse of lawyer-ridden Eng-In the hope of mitigating, if not averting this evil, he caused digests of the Hindoo and Mohammedan eodes to be prepared under his supervision, and forwarded them to Lord Mansfield and other legal functionaries, with an earnest entreaty that they might be diligently studied; and in such changes as the altered state of affairs immediately necessitated, he was eareful, by following the plain principles of experience and common observation, to adapt all new enaetments to the manners and understanding of the people, and the exigencies of the country, adhering as elosely as possible to ancient usages and institutions.

* The roy-royan had before been the chief officer under the naib-dewan, having the immediate charge of crown lands, and the superintendence of the exchequer.—(Auber's British Power in India, i., 369.)

† Gleig's Life of Warren Hastings, i., 301.

† Under Mohammed Reza Khan's management,

There was justice as well as policy in this procedure; and it is only to be regretted that it was not earried out with sufficient exactitude. All attempts to force a code of laws, however excellent, upon people unfitted by antecedent circumstances to receive the boon, have proved abortive: a heathen nation must he educated-and that often very gradually-in the principles of truth and justice brought to light by the Gospel, before they can rightly appreciate the praetical character of these virtues. The thief will not cease to steal, the perjuror to forswear, or the corrupt judge abstain from bribery at mere human bidding; a stronger lever is requisite to raise the tone of society, and produce a radical change in its

in Sanscrit by certain pundits (Hindoo dectors of law), franslated from Sanserit to Persian and thence to English. The Mohammedan code, such as it is, has but one legitimate source—the Koran; nevertheless, an immense mass had been written an the subject, of which a digest called the Hedera filling four large felio volumes, was framed by course of Aurungzebe; and of this work a precus was not executed under the supervision of Hastings. The Brahmins would accept nothing for themselves but have subsistence during their two years library. rectly, to hold lands in any part of the country.

| Halhed's Digest of Hindoo Laws was drawn up

| Bare subsistence Caring their two years Livery
| Promises were mailed feating their two years Livery

the system followed was the ruinous one introduced by Mohammedan nabobs, of farming out the lands annually.—(Dow's Hindoostan, vol. i., p. exxxv.) § No European was permitted, directly or indi-

whole spirit, before public virtue could flourish | ries of Mohammed Reza Khan and Shitain a moral atmosphere so deeply vitiated as broy, effected, it is asserted, a clear yearly sion and vendity, the new culers felt that lent, at the then rate of money, to betheir safest policy was to commence a tween six and seven hundred thousand course of gradual unreligration, rather than of abrupt changes-abolishing only punishments openly at variance with the common dictates of humanity, such as torture and mutilation. Stipendiary English magistrates. were appointed to act with native coffeagues; civil and criminal tribanals were established in rach district, under the check of two supreme courts of appeal—the Suldur Dewanne Adawint, and the Nizamut Suddur Atlantat. In these arrangements one great error was, however, committed, in overlooking, or wilfully setting aside, the system of punchagets, or Indian juries, which had, from time immemorial, been the favourite and almost unexceptionable method of deciding civil disputes.

The immediate difficulties of the presidency at this period were, how to raise funds] wherewith to provide the investments, which were expected to he regularly furnished from the revenues; and to obtain relief from a bound-debt, varying from a croret to a erore and a half of rupces, the interest of which alone formed an item of ten lacs in latter, and inducing him to make every the yearly dishursements. In a premniary point of view, the cessation of the enermons Mohammed Reza Khan. salary of nearly £100,000, paul to Mohammed Reza Klian, was an advantage. He had filled, during the preceding seven years, the double office of naib-subah (properly) subalidar) and naile-downn; that is to say, he had been entrusted with the exercise of against the ex-dewan, or to prevent his all the higher powers of government, judicial and financial (comprehended in the nizamnt), and likewise with the charge of the education and management of the household affairs of Mubarik-ad-Dowlah; the expenditure of the yearly stipend of £320,000 having been cutrusted exclusively to him, Hastings now resolved on reducing the naboh's allowance by one-half—a diminution which, together with the stoppage of the salabut not performed .- (Mastings, iii., 158.) -crore of tupees, according to the existing standard,

† The charge of appressing the people, and applying the most cruel coercion to delinquent renters, was certainly not disproved. Dow, who was in Bengal during the early part of the administration of Molannmed Reza Khan, declares that, on the plea of their inability to fulfil their contracts being a pretence, many of the zemindars were bound to stakes and whipped with such unrelenting barbarity, that India for important information regarding the con-"not a few of them expired in agonies under the duct of Mohammed Reza Khan during the famine.

nmnunted to much above a million sterling.

After centuries of appress saving of fifty-seven lacs of rupees, equivapounds. The youth and inexperience of Mubarik-ad-Dowlah rendered it necessary to nominate a new superintendent for his establishment; and the selection made was so strange, that it gave rise to much subsequent criticism, as to the real motive for choosing a female, and yet setting aside the mother of the prince. Hastings thought fit to appoint to the post of gouvernante Munnce Begum-a person who, previous to her entrance into the sernglio of Meer Jaffier, had been a dancing-girl, but who was now possessed of great wealth; the ostensible reason for the choice being "the awe" with which she was regarded by the nabob, and the improbability of her forming any plots against the English rulers. There were, of necessity, many affairs which eastern enstoms forbade to be transacted by a woman; and the condintor chosen for her was Rajah Goordass, the son of Nuncomar, who, because he inherited neither the ability nor the guile of his father, would, Hastings alleged, prove a safe instrument of conferring favour on the effort for the establishment of the guilt of The Hindoo, however, needed no incentive to stimulate his deep-rooted animosity against his Mussulman rival; yet, with all his ingenuity, he failed to establish the justice of the charges of embezziement and monopolyt brought acquittal, after prolonged examination before a committee, over which the governor presided. The innocence, and more than that, the excellent conduct, of Shitabroy, and the great exertions made by him to mitigate the sufferings of the people during the famine, were clearly proved at an early stage of the inquiry. A formal apology was made for the restraint to which he had been subjected; and a sirpah, or costly state lash;" and many of the ryots, reduced to despair, fled the country. - (Hindoostan, i., exxxvi.) These statements derive corroboration from the reasons given by the directors for ordering the trial of the dewan. In the same communication, allusion is made to the repeated accusations brought against the agents of English officials, "not barely for monopolising grain, but for compelling the poor ryots to sell even the seed requisite for the next harvest."-(Letter to

Bengal, 1771.) Sec Dr. Moodie's Transactions in

with sufficient authority to carry into execu-[resumed in the name of the company; and tion, without cheek or hindrance, the ambi- as their distance from Calcutta rendered tions schemes which filled his mind, and to the fulfilment of which he was ready to devote his life. The constitution of the presidency was a subject of grave complaint with him; for, saving a certain prestige attached to the chair, and the ringle privilege of a casting vote, the governor had no superiority over any other member of the board, except | the involious description of exclusive anthority, occasionally conferred by private! communications, as in the case of Mohammed Rera Khan.

A change was at hand, but by no means such as Hastings desired; in the meanwhile, during the continuance of the old system, the majority of the councillors sided | with him, and enabled him to pursue his own policy, despite the opposition and remonstrances offered by the minority on arranged after repeated private conferences various occasions, especially with regard to lat Benares, held between Shuja Dowlah his summary method of dealing with the emperor. The removal of this infortunate prince from the immediate sphere of British protection, was asserted to be sufficient justitication not only for the withdrawal of the yearly subsidy (to which the faith of the pany; and said that the emperor might, and company had been unconditionally pledged),* but even for the repudintion of the arrears which Shah Alum had been previously assured were only temporarily kept back by declaring, "the sword which gave us the reason of the pecuniary difficulties occasioned by the famine. Nor was this all: the emperor, while at the mercy of the arrogant Mahrattas, was compelled to sign sunnuds, or grants, making over to them Allahabad and Corah. The governor left by him in charge of these districts, knowing that the order for their relinquishment had been foreibly extorted, asked leave to place them under British protection. Hastings agreed with the Mogul officer in the impropriety of obeying a mandate issued under compulsion; | but that same mandate was not the less set! forth by him as conveying a formal renunciation, on the part of Shah Alum, of these districts, which were forthwith formally . The very sunnuls which form the title-deeds of the company, distinctly set forth the ennual payment of twenty-six lacs to the emperor, Shah Alum, as a first charge on the revenues of Bengal.

† Col. Smith nttested that, in 1768, Shuja Dowlah came to him, expressed his desire to possess Allahabad and Corah, and "proffered four laes of rupees in ready money, and to swear secreey on the Ko-ran, if he would aid in its accomplishment." The same officer bore witness, that the emperor sensibly felt the conduct of the vizier, and had declared, with emotion, that it seemed as if he "did to that of "waste paper." -(Life, iii., 192.)

them too expensive possessions to be retained without an addition of military force quite disproportioned to the revenue derivable therefrom, they were openly sold to the man who had once before obtained them by treachery and murder, and who (p. 287), after his defeat by the English, had spared neither intrigue nor bribery for their regainment. † It was an act quite unworthy the representative of a great English association, to let the paltry sum of fifty lacs induce him to sacrifice the last remnants of dominion to which the unfortunate emperor had been taught to look as a refuge from the worst evils that could befall him, to the ambition of his faithless and ungrateful servant. Sir Robert Barker remoustrated carnestly against this procedure, which was and Mr. Hastings, during nearly three weeks of close intercourse. He declared it to be a flagrant breach of the treaty of Allahabad of 1765, by which the dewannce of Bengal was granted to the comprobably would, if opportunity offered, bestow the sunnids on a rival nation. Hastings treated the possibility with scorn; dominion of Beugal, must be the instrument of its preservation:" if lost, he added-"the next proprietor will derive his right and possession from the same natural char-

real, though not very definite value, of which Hastings was fully aware, though he now chose to ridicule them as much as his predecessor Clive had exaggerated their importance; and for precisely the same reason-of temporary expediency.1 It is difficult for the not wish him to have an habitation of his own on the face of the earth."—(Auber's India, i., 191-2.) In 1784, when arguing in favour of aiding, instead of oppressing the emperor, Hastings writes, ter." Even had the imperial grants been worth no more than the parchment they were written on, the company would have been unjustifiable in withholding the purchase-money they had pledged themselves to give: but the truth was, the sunnuds had a

that he demanded assistance from the English on the right of gratitude; asserting, "that when the French and Hyder earnestly solicited his grants of the Carnatic, and offered large sums to obtain them, he constantly and steadily refused them. We know, by undoubted evidence, that this is true." These firmauns had therefore a marketable value very different assured by Sir Robert Barker, on the faith Jaome time, he could not fall in a better of the English, that no ungenerous advantage should be taken of his abscuce from temporary and precarious confederacy of powers, strong only if heartily united, did | not prevent the hostile force from crossing the Gauges and committing great ravages. in Robilcund; but their withdrawal was at length purchased by a hond for forty lacs, given by Hafiz Rehmet, on behalf of himself and his fellow-chiefs, to Shuja Dowlah, who became guarantee for the gradual payment of the money to the Mahrattas. The suceccding events are very confusedly, and | writers. The native, and apparently least inconsistent version, is given in the narrative of the son of Hafiz Relimet, who states that the Mahratta leaders, Holear and father to join them against Shuja Dowlah, offering, as an inducement, to surrender to him the bond given on his behalf, and a share of such conquests as might be made in Oude. The Robilla chief, whom all authorities concur in describing as of upright and honourable character, refused to listen to this proposition, and warned his ally of the intended attack, which, however, the (get on I get on!) The deceitful represen-Mahrattas were prevented by intestine strife (tations made by Shuja Dowlah regarding from earrying into execution. The evertreacherous and ungrateful vizier, relieved from this dauger, immediately demanded the payment of the bond which he held simply as a guarantee against loss, for the henefit, not of the Mahrattas, but of himself and the English; and he had the art to [persuade the latter people that the deed in | the governor, to feel any necessity for circumquestion had actually been drawn up for the express purpose of providing for the expenses incurred in resisting the common foc. Hafiz Rehmet, however disgusted by accomplishment of the projected usurpation. this shameless demand, was not in a condition to offer effectual resistance, having | nation, nor the dignity of his own position lost many of his bravest commanders in the recent hostilities. He therefore forwarded his own share of the required sum, and entreated his fellow-chiefs to follow his example; but they refused to submit to such extortion; and after many ineffectual attempts at compromise, he lit by dwelling on the advantages to be reluctantly prepared for the inevitable conflict, observing, "that as he must die The result was the insertion of a clause in

· Life of Hafiz Rehmet, English abridgment, published by Oriental Translation Fund, pp. 112-113. Also Sir Robert Barker's evidence in 1781. Thornton's British Empire in India, ii., 44.

cause."#

Shuja Dowlah, notwithstanding the pains his own frontier by their mutual ally. This [he had taken to win over some of the minor sirdars or governors, the indefensible character of the country, and the vast numerical superiority of his own treops, was little disposed to confront, without extraneous assistance, the small but hardy Afghan bands, who were resolved to struggle, even unto death, in defence of their hearths and homes in the fair valleys of Rohileund. There were soldiers in India whose steady disciplined valour might be depended upon when fighting as hired mercenaries against even contradictorily, related by different | such combatants as these. A single English battalion was to native armies as the steel to the bamboo: with this addition they became all-powerful; without it, the death of a favourite leader, the outburst of a Simila, subsequently negotiated with his thunder-storm, a few wounded and ungovernable elephants, or a hundred other possible and probable contingencies, might change in an instant the shout of victory and the cager advance, into the yell of defeat and the headlong flight, amidst which even the commanders would lack presence of mind to issue any better orders than the very watchword of panie-chellao! chellao! the reason for which he had been intrusted with the Rohilla bond, was intended to give the English a plausible pretext to aid him in punishing an alleged breach of treaty. At the same time, he was too well acquainted with the wants and difficulties of the Calcutta presidency, and with the character of location in intimating his desire of seizing Rohilcund, and his readiness to pay a large sum for the assistance of a British force in the

Neither regard for the honour of his as the representative of a great commercial body, nor even for the private reputation which he often declared "it had been the study of his life to maintain unblemished," withheld Hastings from receiving this proposition with favour, and even encouraging derived by the projector from its execution.

† Vide Colonel Wilks' graphic narrative of the battles of Hyder Ali, especially of his defeat by the Mahrattas at Chercoolee, and flight to Seringapatam. -(History of Mysoor, ii., 144.)

the treaty of Benares, by which the English quiet spectator of the fight, surrounded by governor agreed to furnish troops to assist the ruler of Ondo in "the reduction" or expulsion of their late allies the Robillas, for a gratuity of forty lacs of rapees, to be paid when the "extermination" should be completed, the vizier to bear the whole charge British force employed in the expedition.*

three brigades into which the Bengal army was divided-viz., that of Allahabad, † joined the forces of Shuja Dowlah, and the combined troops entered the Rohilla country. The English commander was possibly already prejudiced against Hastings, on account of the determination manifested by the latter to keep the military under the complete! control of the civil authority; but this circunistance was not needed to deepen the natural disgust excited by being employed in an undertaking deservedly stigmatised as "infamons." The conduct of the nabobvizier was, from first to last, as had as crucity, cowardice, and rapacity could make The Robillas, astounded by the auproach of English troops, anxiously strove to make terms of peace; but the demand of the invader for two crore of rupees, evinced his uncompromising resolve to proceed to extremities. Hafiz Relunct took post near the city of Barcilly, with an army of 40,000 men. The English commenced the attack by a cannonade of two hours and a-half, the rapidity and persistance of which defeated the frequent attempts of the enemy to charge; at length, after Hafiz Rehmett and one of his sous, with several chiefs of note, had been killed whilst rallying their dispirited followers, the rest turned and fled. Shuja Dowlah had heretofore remained a

* Hastings avowed himself " glad of any occasion to employ the E. I. Cy's forces, which saves so much of their pay and expenses" (Life, i., 359); and regrets being unable to derive "some advantage from the distractions of the Mahratta state."—(i., 397.)

† The Allahabad brigade, established by Clive, drew from Fort William no less than two million sterling in five years. The sum of 30,000 rupces per mooth, paid according to agreement by Shuja Dow-lah, during that period, was searcely fell us n relief, for the officers in command contrived to reap the chief benefit therefrom .- (Gleig's Life of Warren Hastings, i., 343.)

1 The old warrior, conspicuous from his long white beard, stately bearing, and noble charger, when all was lost, was seen to gallop forward to perish (to our shame) on English bayonets.—(Heber, i., 431.)

§ Warren Hastings remarked, that Colonel Champion had little reason to express indignation regarding the destruction of the villages; oud he quoted a

his cavalry and a large body of artillery; but the fortune of the day being decided, his troops made up for their past inactivity by pursning, slaughtering, and pillaging the fugitives and the abandoned camp, "while the company's troops, in regular order in (computed at 210,000 rupees a month) of the their ranks, most justly observed," (says their commander), "we have the honour of In the spring of 1774, the second of the the day, and these banditti the profit." Then followed a fearful destruction of villages, the whole country being overspread with flames for three days after the battle. Colonel Champion vainly besought Shuja Dowlah to give orders for the cessation of these atrocities; and he also appealed to Hastings to plend the cause of the unhappy family of Hafiz Rehmet; hat the answer was, that such interference would probably aggravate the sufferings it was designed to allevinte: and this rehuff was accompanied by an intimation that it was the business of Colonel Champion to fight and not to diplomatise, and that it was especially incumbent on him to refrain from any line of conduct which should afford the nabob-vizier a pretext for refusing to pay the forty lacs—literally, the price of blood.

Thus sharply admonished, Colonel Champion was compelled to abide by the "great political maxim," till then utterly disregarded in Auglo-Iulian policy,-" that no power which supports another as the mere second in a war, has the smallest right to assume a prominent place in the negotiations which are to conclude that war." |

Shuja Dowlah was therefore suffered to finish the affair entirely to his own satisfaction; which he did by following up the slaughter of about 2,000 Robillas on the field of battle, with the expulsion of 18,000

letter written by this officer during the war with the vizier, in 1761, in which he declared, that necording to his instructions he had been ravaging the enemy's country, and had "destroyed upwards of 1,000 villages." This barbarous system was unhappily employed, without scruple, by European commanders; and Clive especially, as a favourite measure, subsidised bands of Mahrattas for the express purpose of spreading devastation round the French settlements ond encampments. Orme's work contains irrefragable testimony of the desolating hostilities of even Luropeans, practised at the expense of the wretched pen-antry, who beheld every nrt of o boasted civilisation employed in strife and bloodshed, and their fields not only ravnged by rival invnders with fire and the sword, but even the mounds reored with unwearied lahour thrown down, and the waters let loose to destroy the cultivations previously irrigated with unavailing toil. Life of Hastings, i., 439.

of the employment of with their wises death; but the wound she had inflicted, or the letter of more driven forth to love though slight, proved mortal, the danger havetest, in every. The Hood is prairier, may been previously potented by her mother, who tare is the population, but his the ctory told by Gholam Hurrein were in factorially elected by the classics. It and his translator. The former denier, the was at that extend that the elimenth of the they better affirms, its truth, and edduces certain Indicatories of a great lateful by being encounteness weigh as the friendship of Selected for the time time tyring " of the outhor for the role of Hofix Relimet, the Robbins, I do ther cold more trusts for alleance with the English, and other rether the form of the case differ cancer, for a draine to pass elightingly over the Arrest to the course, and entry I were do their, what Shuje Double, immediately after there will be a still or point they share false the accomplishment of his much desired Media of the feature of few on few and subject, the procession of Robileuml, was time of other complete over wealth. The wave I by mortal vickness, while yet strong in a first one of a they had neargot in the full energy of middle life; that he sorry, hours left in the are lester of points, impered through many months of intense and a loss release on the setups, were body anough, and then died, leaving his the fire to be the state stated under named dominious to a youth whose addicthe man chite stay of their melegradest, from to the most bateful forms of sensuality elitely, the short of the eliterate hier others being an object of general contempt. of the More I emperous to The response on The Robills was was the last transaction with Lawrence, a together employers for one of importance which marked the career of the Type Table of the career of Hestings as governor under the old system. the power of the energy, but the part Among the other measures of this epoch, with the reservoir of the stray or, the starts was one of a quite mesceptionable characthe can effect of attempts to district the ham, I likewise exerted himself vigorously for the the river of the land with the open to coming a suppression of gauge of thieres and plunder that the first present of pay, that he derive, who, under the name of decoils, was glad to lead to administ to a close, by committed terrible ravages in Bengal. Troops of senastics, or religious mendicants, Elan, who exceed the entertailed half the (the pilgrim-gipsies of Hindoostan), did treat to which he had contrated to carry great mischief under the cloak of fauntical edi, on coclinion of receiving a grant of zeal. The truth was, that during the late Ramp or and certain defendent districts in Jessen of anarchy, crime of all descriptions Hobstrond, suchling a resence of above had licen greatly augmented; and many £ 150,680 per annim.

to a conclusion more by a consideration of tinued as a trade what they had yielded to the failing health of the vizier, than even from the description of the troops. The cases of his rapid decline was estensibly however, of a character so flagrantly unjust, attributed to a concerous disease; but the Musualman historian of these times alludes to a current report—that it was the direct consequence of a wound inflicted by the |in his native village, of which every member hand of the daughter of Hafiz Rehmet, who, when the murderer of her father filled up and the family of the transgressor were to the measure of his crimes by an attempt to become slaves of the state, to be disposed of dishonour her, stabled him with a small at the discretion of government. dagger she had concealed for the purpose. The unhappy girl was immediately put to withstanding the avowed knowledge of the

. After a first Cottle Glair. After ter-the removal of a tax on marriage. He who had first laid violent hands on food, at This arrangement was, Lowever, burried the instigation of ravening hunger, conas a momentary temptation. The measures adopted for suppressing gang-robbery were, that no Christian governor could be justified in adopting, far less in initiating them. Each convicted criminal was to be executed was to pay a fine according to his substance; iniquitous regulations were enacted, notpresidency, that the custom of selling slaves was alike repugnant to the doctrines of the Koran and the Shastras. Moreover, it was lent contribut (Heber, i., 431), and I'vroolla Khra na liberal landlord,"—(Propert on Robileund 1808.) at this very time found necessary to take measures to check the kidnapping of children, and carrying them out of the country from Fort William consisted of seventeen, in Dutch and French vessels,—a practice which "had greatly increased since the establishment of the English government."*

^{*} Stated by Colonel Champion at 100,000 souls. ! Hafis Rehmet is said to have been "an excel-1 Sugar al Mutakherin, iii., 268.

Hastings Governor-general. - The great change in the constitution of the Bengal presidency, decreed by the Regulating Act of 1772-3, was unwelcome intelligence to the governor, who justly considered the actual though ill-defined supremacy vested in the Calcutta presidency, with the high-sounding but empty title given to its head, poor compensation for having his movements fettered by four coadjutors, each one searcely less powerful than himself. The erection of a Supreme Court of judicature, to be conducted by Englishmen after the national method, he knew to be an innovation likely to produce considerable dissatisfaction in the minds of the natives; and the result proved his surmise correct: but no small part of the blame attaches to the individuals of whom it was composed, their ignorance of the customs of the people they came to judge being aggravated by a haughty indifference to the deep-rooted and undeviating adherence to ceremonial observances and the rights of sex and easte, which form so prominent a feature in the manners of the whole native population, both llindoo and Mohammedan. Hastings, indeed, consoled himself for the dangerous character of the new legal courts, because the chief justice, Sir Elijah Impey, his old schoolfellow at Westminster, was the best man that could have been chosen for the office "in all England."+ Most authorities have formed a very different estimate of the same person; and Macaulay has not hesitated to declare, that "no other such judge has dishonoured the English ermine since Jefferies drank himself to death in the Tower."!

Towards the new conneillors—General Clavering, Colonel Monson, and Mr. (afterwards Sir Philip) Francis &-Hastings was not favourably disposed. They knew this, and came prepared to resent any semblance of disrespect. The occasion offered itself before they set foot in Calcutta: the salute

instead of twenty-one, discharges; and tho expected guard of honour did not await their landing. The governor-general understood the effect of these apparent trifles on the minds of the natives of all ranks, and had calculated the degree of respect absolutely necessary to be shown to his colleagues: so, at least, they reasoned; and within six days after their arrival in October, 1774, a struggle commenced, which rendered the conneil-chamber of Calentta a scene of stormy debate for the space of four years.

Mr. Barwell, the fourth member nominated by the Regulating Act, was an experienced Indian official. He had not always heen on good terms with Hastings; but he now steadily, though with little effect, adhered to him against the new-comers. Hastings himself possessed a remarkable degree of self-control, and rarely suffered the violence of Clavering, the pertinacity of Monson-or, worse than all, the sharp tongue and ready pen of Francis-to drive him from the 'vantage ground of equanimity, or tempt him to lay aside the quiet tone of gnarded cynicism, to which the cloquent entlinsiasm of his earlier and parer life had long since given place.

The Benares treaty and the Robilla war were the first subjects of discussion. On the plea of keeping faith with the political agent placed by him at the court of Shuja Dowlnh, Hastings refused to produce the correspondence; and this circumstance, combined with other manifestations of a desire to crush or evade inquiry into matters in which he was personally concerned, gave rise to many grave imputations on his cha-The Robilla war was deservedly denonneed by the majority as a shameful expedient to raise money; but, unhappily, party feeling against Illustings alloyed their zeal, and ensured defeat by its own violence. In diplomacy, all three combined were no match for him, as they soon learned with bitter mortification. The clause in their iustructions which directed examination to be made into past oppressions, was ample war-

I In the council-chamber at Calcutta hangs a portrail of Hastings, bearing the legend-" Mens aqua in arduis." and no better comment need be desired to accompany the semblance of the pale face, slight frame, singularly developed brow, penetrating eye, and thin, firmly-closed lips of the man of whom it has been said, "hatred itself could deny no title to glory—except virtue."—(Macaulay's Essay on Warren Hustings, p. 92.)

The Mr. Middleton mentioned under such suspicious circumstances in the next page.

Revenue Consultations of April and May, 1774; and official letters from Bengal of this date, quoted in Auber's British Power in India, i., 432.

[†] Life of Hastings, i., 471. † Essay on Warren Hastings, p. 50.

⁵ Pronounced very decidedly by Macaulay to be the author of the Letters of Junius.—(Idem, p. 30.) The strongest argument on the other side, is the steady denial of Francis himself, which he reiterated so late as 1817—that is, the year before his death, at the advanced age of eighty-eight.

rant for the impairies instituted by them stated to have been purchased by her in the into various complaints negred by natures of first instance, and subsequently retained by rank against the governor.* No doubt, bribers; and it was alleged in corrolloration, many of these were well founded; for it is that in the examination of her receipts and not likely that a person, as indifferent to dishursements, a large sum remained monthe common rules of honesty and humanity | counted for. She was placed under restraint, in all matters of foreign policy, would be seen and on being closely questioned as to the pulsersly just in his internal errangements, cause of the defelection, she pleaded having that the most purchase point in the querrels given three lass of supers to the governors of this equals, is the rejected recurstion peneral and his immediate retainer, Mr. brought remark him of reachty our, red with | Middleton & The receipt of this sum was a degree of arbemener which may be illuse [not denied; but Hastings sindicated his trated by a single externt from the official form shore in the transaction, by asserting treonle, in which the "gentlemen of the that the lac-and-a-half taken by him had may cut;" far Hartings executioally called been used as "entertainment money," to them) complain, in plain terms, of the "for- cover the extraordinary outlay necessitated miliable combination of everyoncal interest" by his visit to Moorshedabad, over and above which he had established. The secreting the charge of upwards of 30,000 rupees made unwarrantable s launteers himself, and consider the Calcutta treasury for travelling manual at the awdich were received by the expenses; together with a large additional enumary secretish. To this heavy charge sum for his companious and attendants. is added :-" In the late proceedings of the l revenue board, there is no species of pecula-ligards, the exaggerated scale of expenditure

general has thought it right to abstain."! was not as arreious -- far from it: he had habeb, immediately after his allowance had neither taste nor talent for the recumulation | been cut down to the lowest point. The of wealth, and appears to have habitually result of the investigation was the removal mismanaged his pecuniary affairs. For that of Munner Begum from office, and her very reason, the high solary attached to his supersession by Rajah Goordass, the son of office proved insufficient to cover his illregulated expenditure; and this circumstance may account for his basing availed himself of means to recruit his awn exchequer, closely rescubling in character [those simultaneously employed by him on deemed incapable of doing much good or behalf of the company.

against him. Among others, the extraordinary appointment of Munner Begum ! as guardian to the nabob, was now distinctly [in a fair way to be hanged." [

* Among their was the rance of Burdwan, the reliet of the late rajah, Tillook Chund, whose anrestors had governed their rightful heritage as a reminderere during the whole period of Moham-medan sule. The rance complained that she had been set aside from the government during the minority of her son, a boy of nine years old, in make room for a corrupt agent. Another accusation brought against Hastings was that of unduly favouring his native steward, named Cantoo Haboo (a former servant of Clive's), who had been not only allowed to farm lands to the value of £150,000 per annum, but also to hold two government contracts, one in his non name, and the other in that of his on, a boy of ten or twelve years of age, amounting to a still higher sum.—(Dr. Moodie's Transactions in India, p. 211.)

This explanation is quite insufficient as retion from which the honourable governor- adopted by the governor-general during his absence from Calcutta; far less can it justify It has been before stated, that Hastings so large a deduction from the income of the Nuncomar, by whom the accusation of col-Insion between the beginn and the governor had been preferred. The appointment was the act of the majority, conferred-not, of course, for the sake of Goordass, who was harm-but as a strong mark of the feelings Many specific accusations were neged entertained by them to his father; although, at this very time, as Hastings savagely declared," the old gentleman was in gaol, and > offered by the natives of rank), as a dangerous practice; and commented severely on the reasons adduced by Hastings for receiving and paying them into the company's treasury, and by Barwell for receiving and retaining them .- (Letter from Bengal, October, 1774.)

> 1 Consultations of Rengal Conneil, May, 1775. Of the lac-and-a-half of rupees (which, by the existing standard, emsiderably exceeded £15,000 in value) no account was ever tradered, or defence set up, by Mr. Middleton.—(Mill's India, iii., 633.)

"The concentrated bitterness of this expression appears in a striking light when contrasted with the singular moderation of Hastings at the time of the trial of Mohammed Reza Khan, on the charges of wholesale plunder and sanguinary oppression. then remarked on the little chance of capital punishment being inflicted, let the trial end how it would; † The majority steadily refused even the customary giving as a reason—"On ne pend pas des gens qui presents or nuzurs (of comparatively small value, ont un million dans leur poche."—(Life, i., 264.)

The means by which the most dangerous and deadly for ever encountered by Hastings was dashed to the ground at the very moment. when his hand was uplifted to strike, are of a nature which must ever leave some degree of uncertainty as to the degree of culpability attributable to the chief actors.*

The antecedent circumstances require to be rightly understood before any clear concention can be formed on a matter which created no ordinary degree of interest in the mind of the English public, and afforded to Burke a fitting theme for some of the most thrilling passages in his eloquent speeches, in the long subsequent impeachment of Hastings. It will be remembered that Nuncomar, previous to his appointment as nailt-dewan to Meer Jaffier, had been detained at Calentta by order of the directors, on the ground of being a dangerous intriguer, whose liberty might cudanger the safety of the state; and this conclusion was arrived at mainly through evidence brought forward by Hastings, who conducted the examination, and was known to entertain a very unfavourable opinion of Nuncomar. At the period of the trial of Mohammed Reza Khan, the governor-general took great credit for the manner in which, notwithstanding his private feelings, he had entered freely into all the complaints brought forward by the Brahmin ex-dewan against his Mussulman successor. He even showed Nuncomar considerable personal attention until the termination of the affair, when accusations not being established, were pronounced malicious and libellous. Nuncomar felt that he had been used as a mere tool; and, sting to the soul by the disgrace in which his ambitious schemes had terminated, he retired into temporary obscurity, and eagerly waited an opportunity of revenge.

The dissensions which took place in the conneil, speedily afforded the desired opportunity; and just four months after the establishment of the new government, Nuncomar presented a memorial to the conneil, which contained a formal statement of bribes, to a great extent, received by the governor-general from Mohammed Reza Khan, as the price of bringing the inquiry into his conduct to a favourable termination. Francis read the paper aloud: a stormy authorities on this subject truly remarks, that that the hands of the governor-general were alto"opinions may, indeed, differ as to the extent of gether clean."—(Thornton's British India, ii., 71.)

Hastings' culpability; but he must be a warm parti
† Col. Macleane and Mr. Graham.

alterestion followed. Hastings, for once, lost all temper; called his necesser the busest of mankind; indignantly denied the right of the councillors to sit in judgment on their superior; and, upon the request of Nuncomar to be heard in person being granted by the majority, he left the room, followed by Barwell. General Clavering took tho vacant chair.—Nuncomar was called in. and, in addition to the previous charges, he alleged that two erore and a-half of rupees had been paid by Munuce Hegum to Hastings, and that he had himself purchased his son's appointment, as her colleague in office, with another crore.

Hastings felt the ground giving way beneath his feet. The arrangement (to use the most lenient epithet) between him and Munnee Begum, regarding the "entertainment money," would, if other testimony were wanting, suffice to prove that he had not scrupled to obtain, in a more or less surreptitions manner, large sums in addition to the regular salary (£25,000 per annum), and allowances attached to his position of governor-general. The probability was a strong one, that the various and specific charges which the vindictive Brahmin was prepared to maintain at the hazard of his life, would contain at least sufficient truth to enable the adversaries of Hustings to triumph over him, by the ruin of the reputation he had, from early youth, spent laborious days and auxious nights in acquiring. To lose this was to lose all: he had no extrancous influence with crown, the ministers, in parliament, or even with the company, sufficient to prop up his claims to the high position which credit for personal disinterestedness, still more than for great and varied talents, had obtained for him. With a mind depressed by gloomy apprehension, he prepared for the worst: and, to avoid the last disgrace of dismissal, placed in the hands of two confidential agents† in London his formal resignation, to be tendered to the directors in the event of a crisis arriving which should render this humiliating step of evident expediency, Meanwhile he met his foes with his usual undaunted mien, and carried the war into the enemy's country, by instituting proecedings in the Supreme Court against Nuncomar and two kinsmen, named Fowke, in the company's scrvice, for an alleged conspiracy to force a native, named Camul-oodeen, to write a petition reflecting falsely and injuriously on bimself and certain of bis adherents, including his banyan Cantoo Baboo, on whom he was known to have conferred undue privileges. Clavering, Monson, and Francis, after hearing the evidence adduced at an examination before the judges, placed on record their conviction that the charge was a fahrication, and had no foundation whatever in truth. Within a few days from this time a more serious offence was alleged against Nuncomarhe was arrested on a charge of forging a bond five years before, and thrown into the common gaol. The ostensible prosecutor was a native of inconsiderable station; but Hastings was then, and is still, considered to have been the real mover in the busi-The majority manifested their convictions in the most conspicuous manner: they dispatched urgent and repeated messages to the judges, demanding that Nuncomar should be held to bail; but to no purpose. The assizes commenced; a true bill was found; Nuncomar was brought many of them, doubtless, remembered the before Sir Elijah Impey, and after a protracted examination, involving much contradictory swearing, was pronounced guilty by a jury of Englishmen, and condemned to

One of the most moderate and unprejudiced san, indeed, who will go to the length of declaring

The animus of the whole affair could not be mistaken: all classes were infected by a fever of excitement; and Clavering, it is said, swore that Nuncomar should be rescued, even at the foot of the gallows. Impey behaved throughout the trial with overbearing violence, and not only refused to grant a reprieve until the pleasure of the home authorities should be known, but even censured the counsel of Nuncomar, in open court, for his laudable attempt to prevail on the foreman of the jury to join in recommending his client to mercy.* Hastings, who might, had he chosen, have set his character in the fairest light hy procuring the respite of his accuser, remained perfectly

 Thornton's British India, ii., 84. Burke publicly accused Hastings of having "murdered Nunco-mar, through the hands of Impey." Macaulay views the matter more leniently as regards Hastings; but deems the main point at issue quite clear to everyone, "idiots and biographers excepted," and considers any lingering doubt on the subject quite set aside by the strong language in which Impey was subsequently described by Hastings as the man "to whose supquiescent, and thereby confirmed the general conviction that be dared not encounter the charges of Nuncomar.

The sufficiency of the evidence by which the act of forgery was established, is a question of secondary importance when compared with the palpable injustice of inflicting capital punishment for a venial offence on a person over whom the judges had but a very questionable claim to exercise any jurisdiction at all.† Forgery in India was the very easiest and commonest description of swindling-a practice which it was as needful, and quite as difficult, for men of business to be on their guard against in every-day life, as for a lounger in the streets of London to take care of the handkerchief in his great-coat pocket. The English law, which made it a capital offence, was just one of those the introduction of which into Bengal would have been most vehemently deprecated by Hastings, had he not been personally interested in its enforcement. The natives, both Mussulman and Hindoo, were astounded at the unprecedented severity of the sentence; notorious forgery of Clive, and the fate of Omichund: and now an aged man, a Brahmin of high caste, was sentenced to a public and terrible doom for an act, a little more selfish in its immediate motive, but certainly far less dreadful in its effects. The offence which had not barred an Englishman's path to a peerage, was now to doom a Hindoo to the gallows. And yet not so; the ostensible reason deceived no one; and even the warmest partisans of Hastings could not but view Nuncomar rather as the determined opponent of the governor-general, about to pay with life the forfeit of defeat, than as a common fclon, condemned to die for a petty crime. The Mussulmans were mostly disposed to view with exultation the fate of the inveterate foc of Mohammed Reza Khan; but the Hindoos waited in an agony of shame and doubt the dawn of the day which was to witness the evidence is not unexceptionable, since it is very possible that these words referred to the important decision of the judges, ut a subsequent crisis in the eareer of Hastings, when his resignation was declared invalid, and Clavering reluctantly compelled to relinquish his claim to the position of governor-general.

† Inasmuch as Nuncomar was not a voluntary inhabitant of Calcutta at the time when the offence was said to have been committed, but a prisoner brought and detained there by constraint, under port I was at one time indebted for the safety of my brought and detained there by constraint, under fortune, honour, and reputation."—(ii., 255.) But this the circumstances referred to in the preceding page.

ignominious end of a Brahmin who, by their pression which escaped him many years laws, could, for the darkest crime ever pictured by the imagination of man, only be punished with loss of caste. The fatal morning of the 5th of August arrived, and Nuncomar stepped into his palanquin with the dignified serenity so often displayed by his countrymen when brought face to face with a violent death, and was horne through countless multitudes, who helield the melancholy procession with an amazement which swallowed up every other feeling. Caluly mounting the scaffold, the old man sent a last message to the three conneillors who would, he knew, have saved him if possible, commending to their care his son, Rajah Goordass. He then gave the signal to the executioner. The drop fell, and a loud and terrible cry arose from the assembled populace, which immediately dispersed-hundreds of Hindoos rushing from the polluted spot to cleause themselves in the sacred waters of the Hooghly.

The majority in council, thus publicly defeated, sympathised deeply with the fate of this victim to political strife; and the older English officials could not but remember for how many years Nuncomar had played a part, of selfish intrigue it is true, but still an important and conspicuous part in Anglo-Indian history; for his co-operation had been gained at a time when governors and members of council, then mere commercial factors, paid assiduous homage to native functionaries.* The feelings of Hastings may be conjectured from an ex-

Nuncomar was governor of Hoeghly in 1756. He was induced by the English to take part with them against his master, Surajah Dowlah, whose orders of affording aid to the French when besieged in Chandernagore he disobeyed, to serve his secret allies, to whom on several occasions he rendered considerable service, and in so doing incurred the suspicions of the nabols, and was dismissed from office. His subsequent career has been shown in previous pages; its termination adds another name to the list of remarkable deaths which awaited the chief actors in the conspiracy that was earried into execution on the field of Plassy. At the division of spoil which took place in the house of the Seit brothers, nine persons were present. Of these, three (the Seits and Itoy-dullub) were murdered by Meer Cossim All; the fourth (Clive) died by his own hand; the An; the storm (chief by lightning; the sixth (Serasson) was lost at sea; the seventh (Omichund) died an idiot; the eighth (Meer Jassier) went to his grave groaning under every suffering which pecuniary difficulties, domestic sorrows, and bodily diseases, resulting from dehauthery, could inflict. Of the death of Mr. Watts I have seen no record. Gassitee Begum, and several confederates not present on the occasion above referred to, were put to death at later, that he had never been the personal enemy of any man but Nuncomar, † " whom from my soul I detested even when I was compelled to countenance him." He likewise foresaw the effect the fate of his fallen foe would produce in the minds of the natives. To contest with a fortunate man, was, in their sight, especially in that of the Mohammedan population, like fighting against God himself-as futile, and, in some sort, as impious. As to the power of the majority in council, its prestige was gone for ever; although, how the right of making war and peace, levying taxes, and nominating officials, came to be vested in one set of men, and the exclusive irresponsible infliction of capital punishments in another, was a question quite beyond the comprehension of the Bengalees. The governor-general felt relieved from the danger of any more native appeals, pecuniary or otherwise; 1 and whilst the air was yet filled with weeping and lamentation, he sat down to write a long and critical letter to Dr. Juliuson about the Tour to the Hebrides, Jones' Persian Grammar, and the history, traditions, arts, and natural productions of India. this time be renounced all idea of resigning his position, and repeatedly declared, in both official and private communications, that nothing short of death or recall should hinder him from seeing the result of the struggle with his colleagues. That result may be told in his own words-"his adversaries sickened, died, and fled," \ leaving him various times. Meer Cossim himself died poor and in obscurity.

† Life, iii., 338. This speech needs qualification; for Hastings, on his own showing, entertained for Francis, Clavering, and many minor functionaries, a feeling for which it would be difficult to find may other name than personal enmity. One gentleman, appointed by the majority to supersede a favourite nominee of his nwn as resident at Onde, he speaks of as "that wretch Bristowe;" and entreats his old friend Mr. Sulivan (the ancient opponent of Clive, and the chairman of the Court of Directors) to help rid him "from so unworthy an antagonist," declaring that he would not employ him, though his life itself should be the forfeit of refusal.—(ii., 336.)

1 Francis, when examined before parliament in 1788, declared, that the effect of the execution of Nuncommr, defeated the inquiries entered into re-garding the conduct of Hastings; "that it impressed a general terror on the natives with respect to preferring accusations against men in great power;" and that he and his conditutors were minifling to expose them to what appeared to him and his fellow-coun-cillors, as well as to the Bengalees, a munifest danger .- (Mill, iii., 611.)

§ Life of Hastings, iii., 305.

the undisputed master of the field. The how to act; but the violence of General first to fail was Colonel Monson, who, after Clavering in attempting the forcible assumptwo months' sickness, fell a victim to the tion of the reius of government, afforded depressing influence of climate, and the wear | him an inducement or a pretext to repuand tear of faction. The easting vote of diate the proceedings of his representatives Hastings, joined to the undeviating support in London, and declare that his instructions of Barwell, restored his complete ascendancy | had been mistaken; that he had not, and in council, which he exercised by reversing would not resign. Clavering insisted that all the measures of his adversaries, displacing the resignation which had been tendered their nominees to make way for officials of and accepted in England, could not be his own appointment, and by reverting to revoked in India: he therefore proceeded, his previous plans of conquest and dominion, with the support of Francis, to take the of which the leading principle was the oaths of office, issue proclamations as goverformation of subsidiary alliances with the nor-general, hold a council, and formally native princes, especially of Oude and Berar, -a policy which, in skilful hands would, he fort and the treasury. But Hastings had foresaw, act as a powerful lever wherewith to the advantage of that possession which au raise England to a position of paramount old adage pronounces to be "nine-tenths of authority in India. But once again his the law:" he warned the officers of the garambitious career was destined to receive a rison at Fort William, and of all the neighsevere though temporary check. The ac- bouring stations, to obey no orders but his counts sent home by the Clavering party, furnished both the government and the directors of the E. I. Cy. with strong arguments for his immediate recall. With the proprietors he had been, and always continued to be, a special favourite, and they vehemently opposed the measure. Still there seemed so little chance of his continuance in office, save for a limited time, aud on the most precarious and unsatisfactory tenure, that his agents and friends, after much discussion, thought themselves warranted in endeavouring to effect a compromise, by tendering his voluntary resignation in return for a private guarantee on the part of government for certain honours and advantages not clearly stated. The resignation was proffered and accepted, but it appears that the conditions annexed to it were not ful- it had been formally vacated, and could not filled; for the negotiators sent Hastings be reoccupied except with the combined word, by the same ship that brought an sanction of the ministers and directors. order for the occupation of the chair by General Clavering (pending the arrival of with all the special pleading of which he the newly-appointed governor-general, Mr. Wheler), that they hoped he would not | abide by the pledge given on his behalf, since the stipulations made at the same time had been already flagrantly violated.*

On receipt of this varied intelligence, Hastings was, or affected to be, at a loss

• See Letters of Maeleane and Stewart.—(Life, ii., 95.) The "gross breach" of agreement so loudly complained of, was the investment of General Clavering with the order of the Bath. This same "red ribbon" created as much spleen and envy among the English functionaries, as the privilege of carrying a fish on their banners did among the ancient Mogul nobility; and a strange evidence of the consequence, hand of one he so thoroughly despised, demand the surrender of the keys of the at their peril, and altogether assumed so daring an attitude, that his adversaries sbrank from the alternative of civil war, and consented to abide by the decision of the judges. The notorious partiality of the chief justice left little doubt of the issue; but apart from any such bias, the decree was sufficiently well-grounded. The right of Clavering rested on the resignation of Hastings, and Hastings would not resign. In such a case the most reasonable course was to let things remain as they were, pending the decision of the home authorities. The defeated party, and especially Francis, behaved with unexpected moderation; but the victor, not contented with his triumpli, strove to prevent Clavering from reassuming his place in the council, on the ground that This absurd proposition Hastings maintained was an unrivalled master; but the judges could not, for very shame, support him, and Clavering was sullered to resume his former position. These proceedings occurred in June, 1777. They had a most injurious effect on the health of the high-principled but hastytempered general; so much so, that Hastings'

attributed to the intriguing nabob of Arcot at the English court, was afforded by the knightly insignia being sent to him, with authority to invest therewith General Coote, and the royal ambassador, Sir John Lindsay.—(Auber's Indid, i., 306.) The greatest wonder is, that the honest and plain-spoken general did not flatly refuse to receive the honour by the hond of one he as the soughly despited.

proplicey that he would soon die of vexation, was realised in the following August.* Mr. Wheler, on his nrrival in November, was compelled to content himself with the rank of a councillor, instead of the high office he had expected to fill. National difficulties fast following one another, engaged the whole attention of English politicians; and war with America, conjoined to the hostility of France, Spain, and Holland, with the armed neutrality of the Baltic, and growing discontent in Ireland, left the ministry† little inclination to begin reforms in India, which must commence with the removal of a man whose experience, energy, and self-reliance might be depended upon in the most perilons emergency for the defence of British interests in India; although, in less critical times, his aggressive policy necessitated an amount of counter-action quite inconsistent with the unchecked authority he so ardently desired to obtain, and which, for many reasons, it seemed advisable to vest in the governor-general. These considerations procured for Hastings a temporary confirmation in office after the expiration of the term originally fixed by the Regulating Act. In 1779, a new parlinmentary decree announced that £1,400,000 borrowed of the public, having been repaid by the company, and their bonddelit reduced to £1,500,000, they were authorised to declare a dividend of eight per cent. The raising of the dividend seems to have been an ill-omened measure; for once again it was followed by an increase of pecuniary distress, which not even the inventive brain and strong arm of the governor-general could find means to dissipate, although the departure of Francis freed him from the restraining presence of a severe and prejudiced, though public-spirited Before their final separation, a partial and temporary reconciliation took place, effected under peculiar circumstances, through the mediation of Mr. Barwell, who, having amassed an ample fortune, returned to enjoy it in England in 1780. Unanimity in the council was indeed of the first necessity to meet a great and instant dangernamely, the alarming excitement occasioned among the native population by the persevering attempts of the Supreme Court to extend its jurisdiction over the whole of the company's territory, and to exert a controling power even over the conneil itself. Macanlay has drawn a picture of this period in language too vivid and graphic to be condensed, and which has a peculiar value as proceeding from the pen of one who himself filled the position of councillor in the Bengal presidency, in an expressly legal capacity. In enumerating the evils attending the new tribunal, he states that it had "collected round itself,"-

It was about this period that the news of the much desired divorce arrived, which enabled the Baroness Inhoff to become Mrs. Hastings. The Mussulman chronicler, in relating the splendid festivities with which the marriage was celebrated, asserts that the governor general, vexed at the ab- the sudden death of its chief, in 1782, was one of cence of Clavering, went himself to his house, and circumstances which prevented Hastings' recall.

"A banditti of bailiffs' followers compared with whom the retainers of the worst Raglish spanging. houses, in the worst times, might be coosidered as upright and tender-hearted. Many natives highly considered among their countrymen were seized, hurried up to Calcutta, flung into the common gaol. not for any crime even suspected, not for any debt that lead been proved, but merely as a precaution till their cause should come to trial. There were in-stances in which men of the most venerable dignity, persecuted without a cause by extortioners, ilied of rage and shame in the gripe of the vile alguarits of Impey. The harems of noble Mohammedans, sanctuaries respected in the cast by governments of Impey. which respected nothing else, were burst open by gangs of bailiffs. The Mussulmans, braver, and less accustomed to submission than the Hindoos, sometimes stood on their defence; and there were instances in which they shed their blood in the doorway, while defending, sword in hand, the sacred apariments of their women. Nay, it seemed as if the faint-hearted Bengalee, who had crouched at the feet of Surajah Dowlah-who had been mute during the administration of Vansittart, would at length find courage in despair. No Mahratta jayasion had ever spread through the province such dismay as this inroad of English lawyers. All the injustice of former oppressors, Asiatic and European, appeared as a blessing when compared with the justice of a Supreme Court." * "The lapse of sixty years, the virtue and wisdom of many emineut magistrates who have during that time administered justice in the Supreme Court, have not effaced from the minds of the people of Bengal the recollection of those evil days."—(I:stay, p. 49.)

The power of the Supreme Court continued to increase, until it seemed as if every other function of government would he swept away in the vortex created hy its ever-growing circles. Not satisfied with trenting with the utmost contempt the magistrates and judges of the highest respectability in the country, the "lilnek agents," as the chief justice conat length brought him in triumph to pay homoge to the hride. The fatigue and excitement, perhaps, necelerated a crisis, for the general died a few days later .- (Siyar ul Mutakherin, ii., 477.) † The dissolution of the Rockinghaos ministry, by the sudden death of its chief, in 1782, was one of the

the undisputed master of the field. first to fail was Colonel Monson, who, after two months' sickness, fell a victim to the tion of the reins of government, afforded depressing influence of climate, and the wear and tear of faction. The casting vote of Hastings, joined to the undeviating support of Barwell, restored his complete ascendancy in council, which he exercised by reversing all the measures of his adversaries, displacing | the resignation which had been tendered their nominees to make way for officials of and accepted in England, could not be his own appointment, and by reverting to his previous plans of conquest and dominion, of which the leading principle was the oaths of office, issue proclamations as goverformation of subsidiary alliances with the nor-general, hold a council, and formally native princes, especially of Oude and Berar, -a policy which, in skilful hands would, he foresaw, act as a powerful lever wherewith to raise England to a position of paramount authority in India. But once again his the law:" he warned the officers of the garambitious career was destined to receive a severe though temporary check. The accounts sent home by the Clavering party, furnished both the government and the directors of the E. I. Cy. with strong arguments for his immediate recall. With the and consented to abide by the decision of proprietors he had been, and always continued to be, a special favourite, and they vehemently opposed the measure. there seemed so little chance of his continuance in office, save for a limited time, and on the most precarious and unsatisfactory tenure, that his agents and friends, after much discussion, thought themselves warranted in endeavouring to effect a compromise, by tendering his voluntary resignation in return for a private guarantee on the part of government for certain honours and advautages not clearly stated. The resignation was proffered and accepted, but it appears that the conditions annexed to it were not fulfilled; for the negotiators sent Hastings word, by the same ship that brought an order for the occupation of the chair by General Clavering (pending the arrival of the newly-appointed governor-general, Mr. Wheler), that they hoped he would not abide by the pledge given on his behalf, since the stipulations made at the same time had been already flagrantly violated.*

On receipt of this varied intelligence, Hastings was, or affected to be, at a loss

· See Letters of Macleane and Stewart .- (Life, ii., 95.) The "gross breach" of agreement so loudly complained of, was the investment of General Clavering with the order of the Bath. This same "red ribbon" created as much spleen and envy among the English functionaries, as the privilege of carrying wonder is, that the honest and plain spoken general a fish on their banners did among the ancient Mogul did not flatly refuse to receive the honour by the nobility; and a strange evidence of the consequence, hand of one he so thoroughly despised.

The how to act; but the violence of General Clavering in attempting the forcible assumphim an inducement or a pretext to repudiate the proceedings of his representatives in London, and declare that his instructions had been mistaken; that he had not, and would not resign. Clavering insisted that revoked in India: he therefore proceeded, with the support of Francis, to take the demand the surrender of the keys of the fort and the treasury. But Hastings had the advantage of that possession which an old adage pronounces to be "nine-tenths of rison at Fort William, and of all the neighbouring stations, to obey no orders but his at their peril, and altogether assumed so daring an attitude, that his adversaries shrank from the alternative of civil war, the judges. The notorious partiality of the chief justice left little doubt of the issuc; but apart from any such bias, the decree was sufficiently well-grounded. The right of Clavering rested on the resignation of Hastings, and Hastings would not resign. In such a case the most reasonable course was to let things remain as they were, pending the decision of the home authorities. The defeated party, and especially Francis, behaved with unexpected moderation; but the victor, not contented with his triumph, strove to prevent Clavering from reassuming his place in the council, on the ground that it had been formally vacated, and could not be reoccupied except with the combined sanction of the ministers and directors. This absurd proposition Hastings maintained with all the special pleading of which he was an unrivalled master; but the judges could not, for very shame, support him, and Clavering was suffered to resume his former position. These proceedings occurred in June, 1777. They had a most injurious effect on the health of the high-principled but hastytempered general; so much so, that Hastings'

attributed to the intriguing nabob of Arcot at the English court, was afforded by the knightly insignia being sent to him, with authority to invest therewith General Coote, and the royal ambassador, Sir John Lindsay.—(Auber's India, i., 306.) The greatest wonder is, that the honest and plain spoken general prophecy that he would soon die of vexation, was realised in the following August.* Mr. Wheler, on his arrival in November, was compelled to content himself with the ing power even over the council itself. rank of a councillor, instead of the high | Macaulay has drawn a picture of this period office he had expected to fill. National | difficulties fast following one another, engaged the whole attention of English politicians; and war with America, conjoined to self filled the position of councillor in the the hostility of France, Spain, and Holland, Bengal presidency, in an expressly legal with the armed neutrality of the Baltic, and growing discontent in Ireland, left the ministry† little inclination to begin reforms | in India, which must commence with the removal of a man whose experience, energy, and self-reliance might be depended upon in the most perilous emergency for the defence of British interests in India; although, in less critical times, his aggressive policy necessitated an amount of counter-action quite inconsistent with the unchecked authority he so ardently desired to obtain, and which, for many reasons, it seemed advisable to vest in the governor-general. These considerations procured for Hastings a temporary confirmation in office after the expiration of the term originally fixed by the Regulating Act. In 1779, a new parliamentary decree announced that the £1,400,000 borrowed of the public, having been repaid by the company, and their bonddebt reduced to £1,500,000, they were authorised to declare a dividend of eight per ceut. The raising of the dividend seems to have been an ill-omened measure; for once again it was followed by an increase of pecuniary distress, which not even the inventive brain and strong arm of the governor-general could find means to dissipate, although the departure of Francis freed him from the restraining presence of a severe and prejudiced, though public-spirited Before their final separation, a partial and temporary reconciliation took place, effected under peculiar circumstances, through the mediation of Mr. Barwell, who; having amassed an ample fortune, returned to enjoy it in England in 1780. Unanimity in the council was indeed of the first necessity to meet a great and instant danger namely, the alarming excitement occasioned among the native population by the perse-

It was about this period that the news of the much-desired divorce arrived, which enabled the Baroness Imhoff to become Mrs. Hastings. The Mussulman chronicler, in relating the splendid festivities with which the marriage was celebrated, asserts that the governor general, vexed at the absence of Clavering, went himself to his house, and circumstances which prevented Hastings' recall.

vering attempts of the Supreme Court to extend its jurisdiction over the whole of the eompany's territory, and to exert a controlin language too vivid and graphic to be eondensed, and which has a peculiar value as proceeding from the pen of one who himcapacity. In enumerating the evils attending the new tribunal, he states that it had "eollected round itself,"-

"A banditti of bailiffs' followers compared with whom the retainers of the worst English spunginghouses, in the worst times, might be considered as upright and tender hearted. Many natives highly considered among their countrymen were seized, hurried up to Calcutta, flung into the common gaol, not for any crime even suspected, not for any debt that had been proved, but merely as a precaution till their cause should come to trial. There were instances in which men of the most venerable dignity, persecuted without a cause by extortioners, died of rage and shame in the gripe of the vile alguazils of Impey. The harems of noble Mohammedans, sanctuaries respected in the east by governments which respected nothing else, were burst open by gangs of bailiffs. The Mussulmans, braver, and less accustomed to submission than the Hindoos, sometimes stood on their defence; and there were instances in which they shed their blood in the doorway, while defending, sword in hand, the sacred apartments of their women. Nay, it seemed as if the faint-hearted Bengalee, who had crouched at the feet of Surajah Dowlah—who had been mute during the administration of Vansittart, would at length find courage in despair. No Mahratta invasion had ever spread through the province such dismay as this inroad of English lawyers. All the injustice of former oppressors, Asiatic and European, appeared as a blessing when compared with the justice of a Supreme Court."

"The lapse of sixty years, the virtue and wisdom of many eminent practicates who have during that time administrated. magistrates who have during that time administered justice in the Supreme Court, have not effaced from the minds of the people of Bengal the recollection of those evil days."—(Estay, p. 49.)

The power of the Supreme Court continued to increase, until it seemed as if every other function of government would be swept away in the vortex created hy its ever-growing circles. Not satisfied with treating with the utmost contempt the magistrates and judges of the highest respectability in the country, the "black agents," as the chief justice conat length brought him in triumph to pay homage to the bride. The fatigue and excitement, perhaps, accelerated a crisis, for the general died a few days later .- (Siyar ul Mutakherin, ii., 477.)

† The dissolution of the Rockingham ministry, by the sudden death of its chief, in 1782, was one of the

temptuously termed them,* he at length | and to the executive administration of individually to defend themselves against a suit for trespass committed by them in their official capacity. Hastings could bear much from his "respectable friend, Sir Elijah Impey;" but there were limits even to his tolerance; and Francis, who had long vehemently remonstrated against the tyranny of the Supreme Court, willingly shared the responsibility of releasing various persons wrongfully imprisoned by the judges, and of preparing to resist the outrageous proccedings of the sheriff's officers, if necessary, by the sword. But before matters had proceeded to the last extremity, a compromise was effected between the governor-general and chief justice, by means of an offer which the former had clearly no right to make, and the latter no shadow of excuse for accepting. It will be remembered, that before the Regulating Act came into operation in India, a court of appeal had been projected, under the title of Sudder Dewannee Adawlut, to consist of the governor-general and council in person; but this arrangement some relief to the natives against wanton had not been carried out, because the intended members feared to find their decisions set aside by the overweening authority assumed by the "king's judges," as the officers of the Supreme Court delighted to of these times could not easily pass away. style themselves, in contradistinction to the company's servants. It was precisely this independence (in itself so just and necessary, though misused in unworthy and indiscrect hands) that Hastings desired to destroy; and he did so, for the time at least, most effectually, by offering Impey, in addition to the office already held by him, that of chief justice of the Sudder Dewannee Adawlut, with a salary and fixed emoluments amounting to nearly £8,000 a-year, to be held during the pleasure of the governor-general and council. Francis and Wheler united in opposing this arrangement, and stated, in plain terms, that the idea of establishing peace upon the ground of adverse elaims still unrelaxed, and which nothing even appeared to reconcile but the lucrative office given to the chief justice, could be maintained only upon suppositions highly dishonourable to the public justice

· Letter of Impey to Lord Weymouth .- (Mill.)

fairly ventured upon a distinct assumption Bengal. This view of the case was perof dominant authority in Bengal, by sum-| feetly just. Even as far as the rival funcmoning the governor-general and council tionaries (executive and judicial) were concerned, it could produce only a temporary pacification, while its worst effect was-as a parliamentary committee afterwards affirmed -that it gave the governor-general an ascendancy by which he was "enabled to do things, under the name and appearance of a legal court, which he would not presume to do in his own person."† The measure was carried by Hastings and Coote, I in defiance of Francis and Wheler; and the chief justice entered on his double functions, and the receipt of his double salary, with much alacrity, but considerably diminished arrogance, and continued to give underiating allegiance to his patron, until news arrived of an act of parliament, passed in 1782, for the limitation of the powers of the Supreme Court of judicature; accompanied by the recall of Impey, to answer before the House of Commons the charge of having "accepted an office not agreeable to the true intent and meaning of the act 13 Gco. III."

The ascendancy of Hastings afforded outrage, and the subsequent restraint laid on Anglo-Indian jurisdiction, contributed to their further relief.. But the terrible prestige given by the unwarrantable proceedings Moreover, even when its first terrors had been set aside, the labyrinth of innumerable and inexplicable forms, aggravated by the difficulties of a foreign language, in which a native found himself surrounded when brought within the mysterious circle of an English court of law, was calculated to deepen rather than remove the prejudices of persons who might be impelled by suffering to seek relief from present injury or redress for past wrongs, by a course of litigation which experience could scarcely fail to prove so tardy and expensive in its progress, as frequently to neutralise the benefit of an upright and unprejudiced decision. I can speak from personal experience of the fear entertained, by both Mussulmans and Hindoos, of being by any hook or handle involved in the harassing intricacies of a lawsuit; and even to the present day, many natives from the interior habitually fix their abodes on the safe side of the Mahratta ditch—the boundary of chancery and other

The uncompromising opposition of Francis

[†] Report of Committee, 1781.
† Sir E. Coote, who had taken the place of Barwell, civil branches of the Supreme Court. seconded Hastings, though with doubt and hesitation.

to the scheme of Hastings, together with differences on points of foreign policy, terminated in the renewal, and even increase, of former ill-feeling. The governor-general expediency; and even his stauch friends, the recorded, in an official minute, his disbelief in the "promises of candour" made by his opponent, and declared his public, like his private conduct, "void of truth and honour." Francis, whose health and spirits had been for some time visibly failing, and who, in the words of his opponent, had lost all selfcontrol, and uceded to he dealt with like "a passionate woman,"* could ill bear this unmerited taunt. After the conneil had riseu, he placed a challenge in the hands of Hastings. It had been expected, and was immediately accepted. The example had been previously given by General Clavering (the commauder-iu-chief) and Mr. Barwell; and now the governor-general of India and the senior conneillor, with remarkable disregard for the interests of their employers at a very critical period (not to speak of higher principles, which were quite out of the question), proceeded to edify an assemblage of women and children, by fighting a duel, as the Mussulman chronicler has it, "according to the established custom of the nation."† the first exchange of shots, Francis fell, severely but not mortally wounded. He recovered slowly, and resumed his seat at the council board; until, wearied with the unequal contest, he threw up his position and returned to England at the close of 1782, leaving to Hastings the undisputed supremacy. Wheler had gradually heen relaxing in his opposition. After the departure of his unbending colleague, he sided almost invariably with the governorgeneral, who spared no efforts to conciliate him by every possible means, especially by "providing handsomely for all his friends." Yet, however great the triumph of Hastings, and undisguised his delight at the successful termination of a six years' conflict, abundant cause for anxiety remained, on every side, to lower the exulting tone he might have The ministers of the otherwise assumed.

erown and the directors of the company suffered his retention of the highest office in India simply as a measure of temporary proprietors, failed not to give occasional and qualified censure to the unserupulous deeds of the man on whose abilities and experience they relied for the fulfilment of those financial expectations which he had made it his great object to realise. But the very uncertainty of his position tended to encourage his innate propensity for temporising measures, and induced him to purchase golden opinions from his fellow-officials by couniving at innumerable illicit proceedings, for the interest of individuals, to the manifest injury of the revenues of the company and the prosperity of the provinces. Reforms are generally most unpopular where most needed; and Hastings, after forming plans for a large reduction of expenditure, set them aside until, as he remarked, he should be more certain of his own fate; "for I will not," he adds, "create enemies in order to ease the burdens of my successors." This very natural feeling, though somewhat inconsistent with the excessive zeal expressed by the writer for the pecuniary interests of the company, is quite in accordance with the unsernpulous manner in which he dealt with native princestreating their rights and claims as valid or iuvalid, as substautial or mere empty-seeming, just as it suited his immediate object. Such habitual double-dealing, however convenient the weapons it might afford for an immediate emergency, could not fail to render his publicly-recorded opinions a tissue of the most flagrant contradictions; and it tended materially to produce the evils which he endeavoured to prove had resulted solely from the opposition made to his measures by the ex-majority. Those evils are thus enumerated by his own pen:-"An exhausted treasury; an accumulating debt; a system charged with expensive establishments, and precluded, by the multitude of dependents and the curse of patron-

* Life of Hastings, ii., 384. Siyar ul Mutakherin, ii., 518.

§ Idem, iii., 31. He himself acknowledged how little he allowed an "expression dictated by the impulse of present | Wilson's Note on Mill's India, iv., 30.)

emergency," to impose upon him "the obligation of a fixed principle." And one of his ablest and not least partial advocates, in the present day, admits that his determination to hold "his post and his purposes" in defiance of the directors, led him "to devise arguments and assign motives intended to meet the exigency of the moment, and, therefore, sometimes as much at variance with themselves as were the arguments of llose by whom he was so vehemently and invariably opposed."-(Professor

Wheler's support was not, however, quite undeviating; and his despotie chief complained of his attachment to "the lees of Mr. Francis, and his practice of a strange policy of hearing whatever any man has to say, and especially against public measures."—(Life of Hastings, ii., 384.)

age, from reformation; a government de-| pre-sive manner entreated him to guard and bilitated by the various habits of inveterate | guide the person and counsels of his brother licentionances; a country oppressed by and successor Narrain Rao, a youth of screnprivate rapacity, and deprived of its vital teen. Ragoba appeared kindly disposed to recourses by the enormous quantities of the nepher thus committed to his charge, current specie annually exported in the fand the new poishwa was formally invested remittance of private fortunes, in supplies sent to China, Fort St. George, to Hombay, and lately to the army at Surat, and by an l impoverished commerce; the support of (Sukaram Bappoo, Nana Furnivees, and Hombay, with all its new conquests; the charge of preserving Port St. George, and recovering the Carnatic from the hands of a victorious enemy; the entire maintenance of both presidencies; and lastly, a war, cither actual or depending, in every quarter and with every power of Hindostan."5

Hefore proceeding to describe the manner in which Hastings, now alone at the helm, steered his may through this troubled sea of dangers and difficulties, and likewise through personal trials of his own seeking, it is necessary to narrate, as briefly as possible, the leading events which, since his promotion to the station of governor-general in 1772, had taken place in the minor or sister presidencies of Humbay and Madras.

Homnay, 1772 to 1780.—The possession of the little island of Salsette and the fort of Illassein had long been carnestly coreted | by the E. I. Cy., and in 1768, they strongly urged on their Indian representatives the additional security to Bombay to be derived from the nunexation of these places; which, however, they desired to see effected "rather by purchase than war." Under the strong government of Madhoo Rao, the latter experiment would have been sufficiently hazardous; and the result of negotiations opened in 1772, clearly proved the small chance that existed of a voluntary surrender of territories no less valued by the one party than desired by the other. The death of the Mahratta peishwa produced dissensions in the state which, by destroying unity of interest even in Poona itself, offered to the English a prospect of obtaining, in the character of mediators or partisans, the concessions vainly sought for by more legitimate means. Madhoo Rao, always patriotic and unselfish, had diligently striven to avert the calamities by which his ter and servant were dispatched by the early death was likely to be attended. Perceiving his end approaching, he caused his uncle Ragoba to be released from confinement, and in the most affecting and im-

* Life of Hastings, ii., 329. † Grant Duff's Mahrattas, ii., 249.

by the pageant-rajal with the insignia of office. But before long, dissensions arose between the chief ministers of Narrain others, appointed by Madhoo Rao) and Ragoba, the result of which was his confinement to certain apartments in the palace. While smarting under the cheek thus given to his ill-regulated ambition, Ragoba, stimulated by the evil counsels of his tale-bearing wife, Anundee Bye, was induced to gratify the jealous hatred entertained by her against Gopika Bye, the mother of Madhoo and Narrain, by giving a written sanction for the scizure of the young peishwa, which she wickedly converted into an order for his assassination, by changing the word dhurawe (to scize) into marawe (to kill.) domestic, who had been publicly flogged by order of the destined victim, was a chief mover in the plot, which was carried out by working on the discontent of a body of unpaid infantry. They had been extremely turbulent during the afternoon of the 30th of August, 1773, and in the night the ringleader. Somer Sing, entered the palace by an unfinished doorway newly opened to make an entrance distinct from that of the portion inhabited by Ragoba. Narraiu Rao, on starting from sleep, fled, pursued by Somer Sing, to his uncle's apartments, and flung himself into his arms for protection. Ragoba interfered, but Somer Sing exclaimed—"I have not gone so far to ensure my own destruction; let him go, or you shall die with him." Ragoba was too deeply compromised to give way to remorse: he disengaged himself from the grasp of his nephew, and got out on the terrace. Narrain Rao strove to follow him, but was seized by the leg and flung to the ground by the vengeful servant before named. At this moment one of the personal attendants of the peishwa cutered, unarmed, and flew to his resenc; but his fidelity cost him his life, for both masswords of the assassins.+ The unfortunate Narrain Rao appears to have manifested a degree of indecision and timidity, on this trying occasion, remarkable in one of his easte and nation; but these failings were probably not radical defects, but rather incidental to an unformed character.* A scarching praclaimed prishwa when only forty days investigation was instituted into the uffidir ly Ram Shastree, the celebrated judge, whose integrity and ability had reflected so much honour on the administration of his beloved disciple Madhoo Rau, To him Ragnha confessed his partial participation in the crime, and asked what atonement he could make. "The sacrifice of your own life," replied the uncompromising judge; "for neither you nor your government can presper; and, for my own part, I will neither accept of employment, nor enter Poona whilst you preside there." He kept his word, and retired to a sequestered village, from whence he witnessed the fulfilment of his prediction; for Ragoba's "ill-luck" hecame proverbial, and communicated itself, in a greater or less degree, to every enterprise in which he was concerned. At the onset, the total absence of a rival claimant enabled him to obtain, without difficulty, the confirmation of the rajah of Sattara to his assumption of the rank of peishna; but his title was subsequently rendered invalid by the posthumous birth of a son, the rightful heir to Narrain Rau. Considerable doubt was thrown upon the legitimacy of the child by the means adopted by the ministers (Nana Furnayees, Sukaram Bappon, and others), to provide a male substitute, in the event of their influence being endangered by the birth of a girl; but, as the case happened, the manœuvre only served to endanger their own cause, and afford Ragolia a pretext for resisting the claims of the son of his murdered nephew, who was

The English authorities appear to old. have been quite misled by the representations which accompanied his appeal for their assistance; and even when campelled to recognise the atter futility of attempting to establish his supremacy in defiance of the general feeling of the Mahratta nation, they seem never to have rightly understood the nature of his claims, or the basis on which they rested. The cession of Bassein and Salsette, with the payment of a large sum of money, formed the leading stipulations on the part of the Bombay authorities; but as Ragoba was very unwilling to consent to any sacrifice of territory, they took advantage of the plea afforded by an inclination manifested by the Portuguese to regain their ancient possessions, to forcibly occupy them with British troops, protesting, nevertheless, that they held them only on behalf of Ragoba, until he should himself settle the arrangements of the pending treaty. The part taken by Sindia and Holear, in siding with the ministers, left him no chaire but to comply with the demands of the English; and, in return for his concessions,‡ 2,500 men were landed at Cambay, under Colonel Keating, in the early part of the year 1775, to aid his own moh-like assemblage of about 20,000 men. The campaign was successful, though attended with considerable loss of life; & but preparations for the renewal of hostilities, at the close of the monsoon, were suddenly arrested by the interference of the Bengal presidency. The Bumbay authorities were sharply reprimanded for disregarding the recent regu-

* Madhon Hao, where generous nature rose superior to the unworthy considerations which induced the Mogul emperors to treat their near relatives as dangerous rivals, and confine them from infancy to state prisons, delighted in cherishing and drawing public attention to the good qualities of his intended successor. The Mahrattas relate, that the brothers were witnessing an elephant-fight from a small hill in the environs of Poons, when one of the animals becoming excited, rushed furiously towards the spot where they were stated. The companions and attendants of the peishwa, forgetting all courtly etiquette, took to their heels, and Narrain jumped up to run off with the rest. "Brother," said Madhoo Itao, "what will the ukbars [natice neura-papers] say of you?" The boy instantly resumed his reat, and retained it until the danger, which became imminent, had been averted by the hravery of a bystander, who, drawing his dagger, spring in front of the peichwa and turned the animal axide by wounding it in the trunk.—(Duff's Mahratta*, ii., 251.)

† History of Mahratta, ii., 210. An interesting feature in the intercourse of Madhoo Rao and Ram Shastree, is related by Duff. The peishwa devoted himself, at one period, to the practice of "Thep" or religious meditation, to a degree which interfered with his public dutier. Ham Shastree told him, that if he were inclined to revert to the condition of devont and austere poverty, which by the Hindoo doctrine was the especial duty of a thralmin, he would gladly do the same; but if, on the contrary, Madhoo intended to follow the example of his predecessors, and ritain the position of an earthly potentate, the duties incumbent on the assumed office ought to be his first consideration. "The musnud, or a life of self-denial in the holy city of Benares,-which you will," said the honest Mentor; "I will abide with you in either station." Happily for Maharashtra, Madhoo Hao remained its ruler, and Ram Shastree its leading judge,-an unimpeachable one, for he had no thirst for power, and all his habits were consistent with his characteristic rule-to keep nothing more in his house than sufficed for the day's consumption.

1 Hagoba, or Hugonath Rao, having no other funds, deposited with the company, jewels valued at up-wards of six lacs. These gems were, about twenty-eight years later, freely presented to Bajee Rao on his restoration to the office of peishiva, in 1813.

In the small detachment of Colonel Keating, 222 persons perished, including eleven officers.

attempt, made in defiance of clouds of recent convention forbidding the advance of trained cavalry, was more perilons than the the troops from Hengal.1 boldest advance. And so the event proved; for the first retrograde movement of the measure at this discreditable conclusion of Linglish gave the signal for attack to the their attempt to show Calcutta what Bombay whole hostile force. The bravery and skill of Captain Hartley, the officer in command less irritated by a series of rashly-planned of the rear-guard," together with his extra- and ill-executed measures, which nothing ordinary influence with the native troops, but "success, that grand apology for statesconduced materially to save the invading men's hlunders," \ could excuse. His own army from total destruction. After several long-cherished hopes of taking advantage farious charges, the enemy desisted, without of the dissensions of the Mahratta state having made a serious impression on any part proved equally Truitless. A mistaken idea of the line. But the loss of 300 men, includ- of the connexion of Moodajee Ilhonslay, ing tifteen officers, had so completely disparited the military leaders, that they now, i jee, led Hustings to stimulate Mondajee to in continued opposition to the arguments and assert his supposed claim to the raj, or entreaties of Hartley and others, declared sovereignty, upon the death of Ram Rajah advance and retreat alike impossible, and in 1777, and the appointment, under the that nothing remained but to make peace hame of Shao Malaraj, of a distant reluwith the Mahrattas on any terms,—in other tive, adopted as his son, and heir to his words, to confess themselves caught in their gilded captivity by the deceased prince, on trap, and consent to such a ransom. The effort proved fruitless, for Mondajec as their captors might dictate. They were relained a lively recollection of kindness even prepared to give up Ragoba to his received from the grandfather of the infant fors, the ministers; but he, aware of the un- | peishwa, and despite the promptings of amgenerally intention, made private terms of bition, was reluctant to interfere with the surrender with Sindia. The almost indepen- power of that family. dent power of this chief, and the jealousy existing between him and the Poona auexisting between him and the Poona au-child (either Nana Furnayees or Sultaram thorities, enabled the English, by a direct Bappoo) had taken pains to cherish, by application to him, to altain more favourable terms than might otherwise have been conceded; but despite the moderation of the victors, the Convention of Wurgaum formed a fitting ending to one of the few disgraceful campaigns recorded in the annuls of the Anglo-Indian army. Every point in dispute was yielded; all acquisitions made since the death of Madhoo Rao (of course including Salsette) were to be relinquished, as also the revenue raised by the company in Broach, and even in Surat, which the Makrattas had never possessed. Hostages (Mr. Farmer and Lientenant Stewart) were left with Sindia for the performance of the treaty: nevertheless, the first act of the committee by whom the whole affair had been so terribly mismanaged, on descending the Ghaut in safety, was to countermand the well-known tactics of the enemy, such an lorder dispatched in agreement with the

The presidency were indignant beyond could do. Hastings was, on his parf, no These kindly feellings, one of the Hindoo guardians of the placing his infant charge in the arms of young Ragheo, the son of Moodajee, and styling him the protector of the peishwa. Hastings himself remarks that acts of this description establish in the minds of the Mahrattas "ahligations of the most solemn kind," and afford "evidence of a generous principle, so little known in our political system." The powerful minister, Nama Furnavces, was, however, actuated by less generous principles, his chief object being . to use the little peishwa as an instrument for his own aggrandisement and that of his family, to whom he designed to transmit. his paramount authority over the puppet minister of a puppet rajah. These designs were not likely to escape the notice of his colleagues in office, and dissensions arose, of which Sindia took full advantage;

^{*} Sindia loudly extolled the conduct of the rearguard, which he compared " to a red wall, no sooner

beat down than it was built up again."—(Duff.)
† A petty Mogul nabob held Broach, in subordination to the Mahratlas until 1772, when it was captured by a British force under General Wedderburne, who was killed in the arrault.

¹ The hostages were, nevertheless, generously released by Sindin, who did not even demand the parole of Lieutenant Stewart not to fight against him, but, on the contrary, said—"Itevame your place in the army; your sword is your subsistence."—(Wills.)

⁵ Duil's Mahrattas, ii., 379. I Life of Hastings, il., 361.

Kon Property and the second of the Community and the grant from Beneal, and the The world ment has been a state of an entire of the state of the Malantine temporary and are in a finite of the Malantine temporary from in alogous so it esternal that the systematic petty that they are Hender the accomplishthe tree establishment is a present of the file size of pot somely, specify the tree to be size of the file size of the size of the file size of the s Cather to the first of the Core, that only stand maked and by Matter of the com-We see a mile to be a soften as a see that a month of the private of the production en en in i Norde vina enabel a chi no li Recal generali gi genati kai briesa, France i ander man e i alim terrasor, a li Me hamour hab e no li atanima e figural, eliquit and elafficulty a few of the fact at the fact and proved to by the Argino pulse of the path the Ideal Continues on the transfer of the same of the art fact the real provider. A series of the Line all the rate of many analysis to a tree of the group on well the Taylor Mindson and the transfer the tensor, of the let of Jacksey, 17-7, and telesor more that a more worth the electrical test of the most of the most, married by atomic of it had grantly the Maleratan world joby! Min of that, the great his decayed eapth the first particle of the state white properties and a present on the agency of the first was the even of a particle agency of the presents. The famous fattern of proceeding to the earliest of the familiest of manuscriptures and the night of the agency of the earliest o which have the continuously a twenty and and direct force Brough by Hartinger and of and first, in the a constiller constiller pear terrainted with the conquest of after a city of the of the transaction. Researchly Goddend. But these surveyes to the forest of the Constiller the set began a set the est took on acquarters, which residered the linguish anxious frave as I straight if so, I is a tally unital to ear dule a specify people with the Mali-I a second the a weather the more discussed retter on plant than terms. The aspect of

to enter a state of the second state of the second state of the principality, to be the passe of Mahlee and the second state of the principality, to be the passe of Mahlee and the second state of the principality, to be the passe of Mahlee and the second state of the principality of the the passe of the second state of the passe of the three second state of the man children and the second state of the s there is not be the tree of the second of the second of the second of integrity. She attained the age thereon and the tree is the second of second of the se compose to the theorem is a contract to deliver by the trivier, Africh Rome, to planted attribution of the Moderation as 2000.

* It is likely proving by a state law the north-eastern back of the North law was formed by the many state of D at Mohammed, an Afghan in the errain of Autorpreto, Buting the trulles that surrented the dear, of the emperor, he assumed the tate of newab tonglind not ship at dealled mound I im. I so is of adherents whom he had invited from Henget. His encouries contrined to extend their sway, and, what was to be different, to gain the good will of in the highly was the held for a chillenness and annulaficity. After The first of the first that the street of the extent of experition with the the error mand the result of the self-best of afform more in lord alarming; for, at this was only provented by his death of force, perc thurster Ahand the Nisam had merged, the office of the latter of the was the for the moment, their mutual animosities, the Assess of some and the extention of Section for the properties at least of the extention of the extentio

Aurungarde, had upon the dismemberment of the Dodg empire, fallen into the hands of a Jat chief, known as the rana of Gohud. It was taken by Nindia in 1779, and captured, in turn, by the British triving under Major Porham, the scarped rock on which the citadel stood being ascended at day break to means of wooden ladders. Hastings had formed a very exaggerated idea of the power of the rana of Gohud, to whom he restored the fortress; but on distancing his mistake, he changed his policy, and sanctioned its recovery by Sindia, in 1781-conthe interestible Gondager people of Goodwarra, the and sanctioned its recovery by Sindia, in 1781-co inhalitants of the southern portion of the Bhopshi duct which formed an article in his impeachment.

and confederated with their sworn focs, the being the general symbol of revolt. Poona ministers, for the express purpose English officer, Colonel Bonjour, who had of expelling the English and the naboh heen ordered to superintend the settlement Mohammed Ali from the Carnatic. The of the country in the manner desired by Mocauses which led to this alarming coalition hammed Ali, remoustrated foreibly against of Hindoo and Mussulman powers, are closely interwoven with the history of the-

Manuas Presidency from 1769 to 1780. of this government were so avowedly had, that their ruinous consequences seem to have been the natural fruit of the tree they In 1772, the presidency made war upon the poligars or chiefs of certain adjacent districts called the Marawars, not that they had any quarrel with them, but simply because the tyrannical naholi had "made them his enemies, and therefore," the Madras conneillors add, "it is necessary they should be reduced. It is necessary, or it is good policy they should. We do not say it is altogether just, for justice and good policy are not often related."* Hostillostilities were commenced on the above not "altogether just" grounds, and they were carried on, to adopt the same smooth-tongued phraseology, in a not altogether merciful manner. The poligar of the greater Marawar (a boy of twelve years of age), was taken at the capture of his capital of Ramnadaporam, in April, 1772, after brave but unskilful resistance on the part of its native defendants (the tribe called Colories by Orme.) The poligar of the lesser Marawar was slain after a treaty of peace had been actually concluded, owing to a misunderstanding between the English commander and the son of the naboh, Omdut-al-Omrah. during the siege of the various forts: they expected to be little affected by the change of one despot for another; but the grinding said to have surpassed even those of Hyder Ali in the amount of misery inflicted, soon convinced them of their error; and on being turned out of their lands, many took up an object which, being in itself oppressive to the last degree, would require for its accomplishment "extremities of a most shocking -The principles which guided the counsels nature." For instance, the impossibility of seizing the armed and watchful foc, must, he said, be met hy such reprisals as the complete destruction of the villages to which they belonged, the massacre of every man in them, and the imprisonment (probably to end in slavery) of the women and children; with other "severe examples of that kind." I Colonel Bonjour received an answer very similar to that given by Hastings to Colonel Champion in the case of the Robillas, to the effect, that these things were the natural consequences of war, and that the worthy Mohammed Ali must not be affronted by importinent interference. In fact, the majority of the Madras council, at this period, were the nabob's very humble and obedient servants, although some trouble was taken to conceal the fact from their "honourable masters" in Leadenhall-street. Subserviency of so manifestly degrading a character, could scarcely be the result of any lut the most unworthy motives; and the simple truth appears to have been, that the leading English councillors entered upon the extension of the power of the Mohammedan naboli of Arcot, as a particularly safe and promising speculation, since if their efforts succeeded, great part of the profit would be their own; and in the event The peasantry, as usual, remained passive of failure, the expenses must be borne by So early as 1769, three the company. members of conneil held a large assignment of territorial revenue, which the Court of exactions of the new conqueror, which are | Directors subsequently discovered; and many official and private persons received from the nabob, bonds for the repayment of money lent and not lent, the true consideration given or promised being of a descriparms in sheer despair—the inverted plough tion which neither party eared to specify.

• Parl. Papers, quoted by Mill, iv., 100. † Mill's India, iv., 103.

the misrule of Muliammed Ali "left at an liumlile distance all the appression that had ever been practised under the iron government of Hyder."—(Mysoor, ii., 103.) Swartz corroborates this statement by his remarks on the regularity and dispatch with which the government of Mysoor was conducted. "Hyder's economical rule is to remain all damages fine, but pocketed the money himself, declaring that this appropriation was, by restraining oppression, nearly as good fir the people, and a great deal better peans in the Carnatic leave everything to go to for the sovereign. Nevertheless, Wilks states that

[†] Col. Wilks describes the sway of Hyder as one succession of experiments as to how far extertion could be practised on the farmer without diminishing cultivation. When his subjects claimed justice at his hands, he punished the offenders by a heavy fine, but pocketed the money himself, declaring that

When the above of secretarization of the consisting or of the expression of the expr An extra control of a part of months of the transfer of the management of the expression of the control of the of the first street of the experience of the exp and the manufacts with mind of the analysis are earlier to a figure earlier to attack, the to the letter that the transaction of the second of the latter of the second of the least of the second of the sec to the first of th revers to be by according at a storage rate organization of the firstly felt into the family of of Milland of Alast the properties of Milland of Me, by whom has dominions To make the continuous production of the disconference for ally a confict. The indignation the commercial confidence of the proceedants of the entire of the entire transfer that the mental has a errolled out or at Transport in Materials produce which lacked even the thread-As of the first the of class, enough there redson both actions established wing out the property dust up any content of the end that endature distinct of officers at Loine) for to be related to the second of the late of the region of the rejah of Tanjore; Its less related the research friend, was r is the many about their test or of sent out reportmen, in 1775, for their case the feeling Registers and by Lorons, if rement. This not of justice was not carare force their times among the may be the lithrough in a purely disinterested mans. excitations interests but his enamed agrees, her, for supulations were made for the mainsor, Individe, firstling this shread johes, tenance of an English garrison within the nighted to the Dutch at Negapetam, and the citabel, and the payment of tribute to the Direct Tranqueter, for the means where mainth to pay a heavy sum which he had been Mohammed Ali to the surrender of Tanjore. compelled to constitute to the Arest author Le even formed a plan for its foreible de-" rither's the price of peace, to late as 1771, | tention,; which was forestalled by the prompt

* Fig. Wills, Marcon, II. 2001 and Hickory to an Irich poer. A treaty with the rajsh of Tanjore, in plant to according to a Courant delta, in which he at the first that the rate to a fact that returned a plat returned to the control of the Wills Marcon, in, 225. Molantimed Alice of the Wills Marcon, in, 225. Molantimed Alice of the Wills of the control of military military. Per bere to see British parlaments

Personal transfer of the first I the first term to be been any time as displaying in The first property of the first property of the compact of the limits of the compact The first term of the province of the first terms of the second many, was a first term of the first term of the first terms of A supplied to the control of the contr and the state of the test to the The first section of the first section of the first section of the first section of Bridge section of the first se property with the training of the control of the co

then Price bright was a writer to Madras in 1775; that exercise the large amount of military was from tel to the government in 1775; there, in 1764, with an in mense fortune; and of signed. The Danish authorities at Tranque-wert here, in 1764, with an in mense fortune; and of signed. The Danes had no great reason to rejoice and decisive measures of Lord Pigot, who proceeded in person, in the spring of 1776, to reinstate Tuljajee in his former dignity. The conneil took advantage of his absence to consider the delicate question of the pecuniary claims of individuals, especially those of Mr. Paul Benfield. The ease of this individual may serve to illustrate the character of the nabob's debts, the majority of which were similar in kind, though less in degree. in proportion to the opportunities, andacity, and cunning of the parties concerned. Benfield was a junior servant of the company, with a salary of a few hundred pounds a-year, which, as all old Indians know, could leave little margin for extravagance; nevertheless, this elever adventurer, having in his own scheming brain a talent for moneymaking searcely inferior to that vested in the fairy purse of Fortunatus, contrived not only to support a splendid establishment and equipages, unrivalled at Madras even in those days of luxury and ostentation, but also to obtain certain assignments on the revenues of Tanjore, and on the growing erops of that principality, to the enormous extent of £234,000, in return for £162,000 ostensibly lent to the nabob of Arcot, and £72,000 to individuals in Taujore. was the leader of the party arrayed on the side of Mohammed Ali, who had actually signed bonds to the amount of nearly a million and a-half sterling, backed by assignments on the revenues of Tanjore; and the very nature of these claims caused them to be urged with peculiar acrimony and violence. In Calcutta, the character of the majority by whom Hastings was at this very time so fiercely opposed, was wholly different to that with which Pigot had to struggle. Clavering, Monson, and Francis might be reproached with party spirit, but in all pecuniary matters their reputation was uublemished, and their public proceedings were, consequently, free from the baneful in the transaction, for Hyder made them pay a fine of £14,000 sterling for furnishing his inveterate foe with warlike weapons; and Mohammed Ali, despite his desire to keep the affair quiet, liquidated but a small portion of the stipulated price. The whole matter came to light in 1801, when the E. I. Cy. took possession of the Carnatic, and on the production of the screet correspondence with the nabob, paid the Danish Cy. a balance of £42,304.—(Wilks, i., 10.)

Danish Cy. a balance of £42,304.—(Wilks, ii., 10.)

* The scale on which bribery was earried on, may be conjectured from the fact, that Admiral Pigot declared in the House of Commons, in 1778, that his brother, the late governor, had been offered a bribe, amounting to £600,000 sterling, only to defer for a time the reinstatement of the rajah of Tanjore.

and narrowing influence of self-interest. At Madras the ease was wholly different; the majority consisted of men of deeply corrupt character, who, in return for accusations of venality in abetting the aggressions of the nabob, reciprocated the charge against all the upholders of the rajah, from the governor downwards.* The previous career of Lord Pigot did not facilitate the performance of the invidious task he had undertaken. Like Clive, he had formerly accumulated an immense fortune by questionable means, and had returned to root up abuses which, at an earlier stage, might have been nipped in the bud. Even his present visit to Tanjore, and the part played by him in the struggle for the appointment of a resident at that government, was far from being free from all suspicion of private ends and interests, either as regarded himself or his immediate retainers. But, however alike in their views and motives, the positions of Clive and Pigot were very different. The latter, instead of possessing supreme anthority, was subordinate to a governor-general by no means inclined to afford cordial support to any reformatory measures, save of his own introduction; and Lord Pigot, trusting too much in his own strength, by a haughty and violent line of conduct, + soon brought matters to a crisis he was unprepared to The imprisonment of Sir Robert Fletcher, with the attempted suspension of two of the leading members of council, was retaliated by his own arrest, performed in a very unsoldier-like style by the temporary commander-in-chief of the army, Colonel Stuart, with the aid of a coachman in the pay of Mr. Paul Benfield. Having thus unceremoniously disposed of their chief, the majority proceeded to enact a series of legal, or rather illegal forms, and assumed the whole power of government. They did not long enjoy their triumph; for the home authorities, astonished and alarmed by such

† Swnrtz, commenting on the proceedings of which he was an cye-witness, remarks:—"Probably his intentions were laudable, but he began not with God."
† Col. Stuart was on terms of close intimacy with Lord Pigot; had breakfasted and dined with him on the day of the arrest, and was ostensibly on the way to sup with him, when the carriage of the governor, in which they were both seated, was, by the appointment of the colonel himself, surrounded and stopped by the troops.—(Mill, iv., 134.) The governor was dragged out, made a prisoner, and thrust into Benfield's chaise.—(Vide Abstract of Trial of Stratton, Brooke, Floyer, and Mackay. Murray; London, 1780.)
§ Hastings "persuaded his colleagues to acquiesce in the new arrangements."—(Life, ii., 106.)

strange excesses, recalled both the de-| sired to keep the Mahrattas at bay by means posed governor and his opponents, that the of an alliance with the English, whose enmity whole matter might be brought to light. Before these orders reached India, Lord Pigot had sunk under the combined effects | Madras government temporised with him of mental suffering and imprisonment for nine mouths in an ungenial climate. death terrified all parties into a compro-The chief civil servants concerned in the affair returned to England; the four members of council paid the to them very trifling fine of £1,000 each, and the subordinates erept back into the service. Colonel Stuart was tried by a court-martial, and, unhappily for the company, acquitted.

The new governor, Sir Thomas Rumbold, reached Madras in 1778, and applied himself, with much energy, to the improvement of his private fortune. The council cheerfully followed so pleasant an example; and unwonted tranquillity prevailed within the presidency, the predominant feature being wilful blindness to the storm gathering without. Yet even Mohammed Ali beheld with alarm that the utterly inconsistent, hesitating, yet grasping policy long persisted in, was about to issue in the conjoined hostilities of Hyder Ali, the Nizam, and the Mahrattas, to each of whom distinct occasions for quarrel had been given; and to these dangers the fear of French invasion, owing to the outbreak of European war, was added. Hyder Ali, their most formidable foe, had been made such by their own misdoings. He had earnestly de-

* Hyder entered Coorg in 1773. The rajah (Divaia) fled, and was afterwards captured; but the people hastily assembled on a woody hill, which was immediately surrounded by the enemy. Scating himself with much state, Hyder proclaimed a reward to him. After receiving about 700, two were de-posited on the heap of such singular beauty, that, looking earnestly at them, he ordered the decapitation to cease. The remaining Coorgs were not, how-ever, disposed to submit tamely to the usurper notwithstanding the tribute paid to the finely-formed heads of their murdered countrymen; and when he proceeded to raise the assessment on produce from the ancient tenth to a sixth, they rose as one man, but were again reduced to submission by a sweeping massacre of nearly every individual of note.—(Wilks.)

† Gooty is almost impregnable under ordinary circumstances; but the number of refugees from the town, and the quantities of cattle driven into the citadel, had exhausted the reservoirs of water; and Morari Rao, after above three months' siege, was reluctantly compelled to treat for peace, which Hyder guaranteed on condition of receiving eight lacs of rupees in coin, or that amount in jewels, immediately, and a hostage for the subsequent payment of four more. The hostage, a brave but inexperienced youth, won by the praise bestowed on his chief and himself by the conqueror, imprudently boasted that History of Mysoor, ii., 182.)

he dreaded, fearing, above all things, the unseen resources of the E. I. Cy. for years, and he bore all manner of neglects and slights, waiting, in sullen silence, an opportunity of revenge. After the death of Madhoo Rao, he regained his previous conquests, and largely increased them. The little principality of Coorg,* and Gooty, the cagle's nest of Morari Rao, fell successively: the first, before a sudden invasion, most barbarously carried through; the other under peculiar circumstances of treachery.+ The Mahratta chieftain soon perished under the influence of the insalubrious climate of a hill-fort, called Cabal Droog, aggravated by food of so unwholesome a character as to be almost poisonous. His family, being subjected only to the first of these evils, survived him fifteen years, and then perished in a general massacre of prisoners, ordered by Tippoo, in 1791.

At the close of the year 1770, Hyder contemplated with delight the fertile banks of the Kistna, newly become the northern boundary of the empire he had erected; but still unsatisfied with its extent (as he would probably have been bad it comprised all India), he proceeded in person to besiege the fortress of Chittledroog, t which, amid the chances and changes of previous years, had fallen into the hands of a brave Hindoo nothing short of being reduced to three days' water would have induced Morari Rao to capitulate. Hyder forthwith resumed the blockade, which he maintained until the garrison, in an agony of thirst, consented to an unconditional surrender, and then such as escaped with life and liberty were robbed of every other possession; even the women being despoiled of their accustomed ornaments, for the exclusive benefit of the perfidious invader.

† The second siege of Chittledroog lasted three months, and was attended with immense loss of life. The garrison believed the place invested with supernatural strength as the site of a famous temple dedicated to the goddess Cali, so long as her rites were duly performed. Unlike Hindoo deities in general, Cali was supposed to delight in blood, and consequently her worshippers, despite the rashness of such a proceeding, regularly sallied forth, after performing their devotions, on every successive Monday morning during three months; and notwithstanding the warning to the besiegers, given by the loud blast of a horn as the signal for the outburst, and the foreknowledge of all except the exact point of attack, the Beders never once returned without carrying off the specific number of heads to be offered to their tutelary deity, upon whose shrine about 2,000 of these bloody trophies were found ranged in small pyramids after the fall of the place .- (Colonel Wilks' poligar or chief. The native garrison defended the place with the fearless zeal of fanaticism, but were betraved by a corps of Mohammedan mercenaries, whom Hyder found means to corrupt through the medium of their spiritual instructor, a hermit of reputed sanctity, who resided unmolested on the plain below, near the hostile encampment. The natives of the

(chiefly of the Beder . unconquerable attachment to the fallen chief. In vain Hyder had seized all the visible property, and consumed all the provisions on which his practised pilferers could lay hands; neither these measures, nor the infliction of the most cruel punishments on every person engaged in the conveyance of supplies to the besieged, could deter men, women, and even children from sacrificing their lives, in continued succession, in the attempt to support the garrison. Hyder at length determined to sweep off the whole remainder of the population, whose fidelity to their besieged countrymen had alone prevented their following the general example of flight to the woods, or other provinces. About 20,000 were earried away to populate the island of Seringapatam; and from the boys of a certain age, Hyder formed a regular military establishment of captive converts, in imitation of the Turkish janissaries (new soldiers.) These regiments, under the name of the "Chelali" battalious, were extensively cmployed by Tippoo Sultan. The reduction of the small Patan state of Kurpa and several minor places, next engaged the attention of the Mysoorean. One of these expeditious nearly cost him his life, by rousing the vengeance of a party of Afghan captives, who having overpowered their guards in the dead of night, rushed to his tent, and the foremost having succeeded in effecting an entrance, aimed a deadly blow at the rich coverlid which wrapped what he took to be the body of the sleeping despot. But Hyder himself had escaped to the protection of the nearest corps. On first hearing the uproar he guessed its cause; for it was a portion of his carthly punishment that, sleeping or waking, the dagger of the assassin was never absent from his thoughts. Despite the burden of advancing years, his mental and physical energies were wholly unimpaired. Chelah was a softened name for slave; first em-

hammedan, than under Christian masters; and the every natural tie of family, country, and creed.

Springing from his couch, he performed the favourite feat of the nursery hero, Jack the Giant-killer, by stealthily laying his long pillow in the place of his own body. cutting a passage through the side of the tent, he effected a safe and unsuspected retreat. The wretched Afghans were slain or disarmed; those taken alive were reserved for various cruel deaths, such as having their hands and feet struck off, or being dragged round the camp tied to the feet of elephants. until, and even long after, life had left their mangled bodies.

Such was the barbarous character of the foe whom the English had so long braved with impunity, that, from the sheer force of habit, they continued to treat him with contemptuous superiority, even after the unpromising state of their own affairs, in various quarters, rendered it obviously advisable to adopt a conciliatory policy. The renewal of European war, would, it was probable, prove the signal for an attempt, on the part of the French, to regain their lost possessions in India, by the co-operation of some of the more powerful native states. It was notorious that St. Lubin and other adventurers, had essayed to ingratiate themselves as representatives of their nation, with the Mahrattas and also with Hyder. But both these powers were bent on avoiding any intimate connexion with European states, whose tendency to become supreme they justly dreaded, though they were ever desirous to purchase, at a high rate, the services of foreigners to discipline their troops. Hyder especially dreaded the effect of French influence, and would certainly have had no dealings with that government, save as a counterpoise to the English and Mohammed Ali, whom he cordially detested. Affairs were in a very precarious condition, when intelligence of the renewal of war in Europe reached Bengal (July, 1778); and, though somewhat premature in character, Hastings thought the information sufficiently authentic to warrant the immediate seizure of the whole of the French settlements before reinforcements should arrive from England, or time be given for the adoption of any concerted plan of defence. Chandernagore, with the factorics at Masulipatam and Karical, surrendered without resistance. Pondicherry bondsmen of the palace, even beneath the sway of ployed by Akber, who disliked the harsh term, Hyder, had so much the air of "children of the house," but not the odious thing denoted. Slavery has, that the good missionary, Swartz, praises the care however, habitually assumed a milder form in the evinced for orphans, in total ignorance that Hyder's East than the West Indies, under Hindoo and Mo- | protection had been purchased by the severance of

was captured after a combined attack by scal and land. The French squadron, under M. Tronjolly, was worsted by the English admiral Sir Edward Vernon, and quitted the coast ment in his capacity of a linguist, but by night; but the garrison, under M. Belle- withheld from time to time. Hyder, who combe, held out bravely, and availed them- had ever been distinguished by discrimiselves of every advantage derivable from the nation of character, fully appreciated the strong defences, which had been restored singlemindedness and unaffected piety of since their destruction in the course of the last war. A breach having been effected, and a combined assault planned by the troops under Sir Hector Munro, in conjunction with the marines and seamen, further resistance became hopeless; the place capitulated, and its fortifications were razed to the ground. The fortress and port of Mahé alone remained to the French. The territory in which they were situated (on the Malabar coast), beside being included in the recent conquests of Hyder, was the depôt for the military stores which he obtained from the Mauritius; he was therefore extremely anxious for its retention by its French possessors, and dispatched a vakcel (ambassador or envoy) to Madras, threatening the invasion of Areot in the event of any hostile attempt on Mabé. The fortress was nevertheless besieged and taken in March, 1779, although the colours of Mysoor were hoisted on the walls with l those of the French, and its troops assisted in the defence. The presidency were not without misgivings regarding the hazard incurred by these multiplied provocations, and Sir Thomas Rumbold made an effort to discover the intentions of Hyder, by dispatching to his court the missionary Swartz, the only ambassador he would consent to receive. "Send me the Christian," said Hyder; "he will not deceive me."* The reward of the envoy was to be some bricks

* Swartz had exerted his great personal influence very successfully for the peaceful and equitable set-tlement of Tanjore. Hyder had probably heard much in his favour; and his own opinion, formed from subsequent observation, was forcibly shown by the order issued in the Carnatic war, "to permit the venerable Father Swartz to pass unmolested and show him respect and kindness, for he is a holy nian, and means no harm to my government." † Private resources Swartz had none; little help could be expected from the Europeans of Madras, who, he says sorrowfully, could contribute 10,000 pagodas for a playhouse, "but to build a prayhouse people had no money." The immorality of nominal Christians, he considered the most serious obstacle to the conversion of the heathen; especially in the case of the rajah of Tanjore .- (Wilks, ii., 569.)

† Perhaps two more opposite characters never engaged in familiar converse than when the vindictive, ambitious, and merciless Hyder sat and talked with the

and mortar, to build a church, from the stores at Tanjore. † These had been already promised for service rendered to governhis visitor, with whom he held frequent intereourse,‡ and suffered him to convey religious instruction to the European soldiers in his service, and to hold unrestricted communication, not only with them, but also with the native troops, through the medium of the Persian, Tamul, Mahratta, and Hindoostanee languages. Swartz refused to accept any gift from Hyder, even for his church, and on taking leave, stated with carnestness, that a desire for the prevention of war was the sole motive that had induced him to undertake a political mission, which, under the circumstances, he considered as in nowise derogatory to the office of a minister of God, who is a God of peace. "Very well, very well," said Hyder; "if the Euglish offer me the hand of peace and eoneord, I shall not withdraw mine." Swartz returned to Madras and related the verbal assurance, which qualified the written communication of which he was the bearer, wherein the various grievances sustained by the Mysoorean state, as well as by Hyder personally, from the time of the breach of faith regarding Trichinopoly in 1754, down to the recent offence of attempting to march an army, without even asking his sanction, through his recently acquired territory of Cudapah to that of Bassalht gentle, self-denying, peace-loving missionary, in one of the stately halls of the palace of Seringapatam, overlooking gardens adorned with fountains, cypress groves, trees grafted so as to bear two kinds of fruit, and every refinement that luxury could suggest. Hyder appears to have made no attempt to disguise his barbarous system of administration; for Swartz speaks with horror of the dreadful tortures inflicted on the collectors of revenue if they failed, under any circumstances, to collect the stated revenue. "Although Hyder sometimes rewards his servants, yet the principal motive is fear. Two hundred people, with whips, stand always ready to use them. Not a day passes on which numbers are not flogged. Hyder applies the same cat to all transgressors alke,—gentlemen, horsekeepers, tax-gatherers, and his own sons;" but they are not dismissed, but continued in office; for Hyder, adds Swartz, "seems to think that almost all people who seek to enrich themselves are void of all principles of honour."

Jung at Adoni, were enumerated; with the ominous conclusion—"I have not yet taken revenge; it is no matter."

The authorities, immersed in the deadly stupor of indolence and venality, conducted themselves as if wholly indifferent to the las warranted by their pecuniary necessities, threat thus significantly conveyed. Swartz found that he had been a mere tool, and that Hyder had appreciated more justly than himself the selfish duplicity of Sirleharge upon the revenues of Bengal. Thomas Rumbold and his colleagues. Still persevering in the insulting affectation of was perfectly aware of the ill-feeling exista desire to preserve amity, they actually sent to the magnificent court of Mysonrto a sovereign enriched with the spoil of tile intentions and atter contempt he enterprincipalities and provinces—a private per-! son of no note as ambassador (Mr. Gray), bearing with him an ill-made English saddle (hegskin to a Mussulman!) and a ritle which [loaded at the breech. The presents were declined as unworthy the giver or intended receiver; neither would Hyder grant a private audience to the envoy; but on learning, through one of his nobles, the desire of the presidency to form an alliance with him, he sent word that he had at one period earnestly and repeatedly solicited it without effect, but was now strong enough to stand alone. The most alarming part of this defiant message is said to have been withheld by Sir Thomas Rumbold, whose policy was at the time directed to carrying off an immense fortune safe to England. Taking leave of the council, he congratulated them on the prospect of peace at a moment when every nerve ought to have been strained to prepare for defence against invasion, and took his departure in time to avoid the receipt of the recall then un its way to India + Among the political errors urged against him was the offence given to Nizmu Ali, by compelling his brother and subject, Bassalut Jung, to make over the Guntoor Circar to the company in 1779, instead of suffering him to enjoy it for life, as agreed upon by the treaty of 1768; and then using this extorted concession as a means of gratifying the empidity of Mohammed Ali, to whom this fine district was to be let in farm. Both the London directors and the Bengal authorities strove to assuage the anger of the Nizam at conduct which he was both able and willing to resent; but the Madras officials persisted in justifying their conduct in this respect, and also in endeavouring to repudiate the arrears of peshensh, or tribute, due for the other Circurs, and far less faulty in principle, than the breach of faith committed in withholding the tribute pledged to the emperor as a first

Hyder Ali had spics everywhere, ing between the controlling and subordinate governments, and made no secret of the hostained towards the latter. The extraordinary apathy of the majority of the council, together with the violent measures used to stide the representations of the few who advocated the adoption of immediate measures for the defence of the Cornatic, gave weight to his assertious that the time had arrived for all Indian powers to unite in expelling the one great European state which threatened to engulph every other. Now, in its moment of weakness, when the reins of anthority were vested in ideapable and selfish hands, a short and decisive struggle might, by the emijoined strength of Mohammedans and Hindoos, brought to hear against the common for, be attended with such complete success as "to leave not a white face in the Carnatic." The confederacy advocated by Hyder was actually formed, and a plan laid down which, if all parties had carried out their pledge as he did his, might have gone for to realise the desired object. Mohammed Ali, for once a true prophet, foretold the coming storm; but in vain. The presidency persisted in declaring that the dark clouds which they could not deny overshadowed the political horizon, would pass away or he dissipated by the precautions of the Bengal council; -days, weeks, months clapsed, at a time when even hours of continued peace were of incalculable importance, without any attempts for reinforcing weak garrisons in important positions, or for making arrangements for the provisioning of troops, notwithstanding the obvious necessity of the latter measure in all eases of threatened invasion, especially hy a foc whose desolating and destructive mode of warfare was proverbial. the very man who had once before dietated terms at the gates of Madras, was treated as a mere braggart, even after he list netually erossed the frontier, and was : ?

proaching, with his two sons, at the 2 rad of above 80,000 men, supported by a large train of artillery and a considerable body of [·] Vide Captain James Munro's Coromandel Coast, p. 130. Dr. Moodie's MSS., in library of E. I. Cy. † A criminal prosecution was commenced against him in 1782, in the House of Commons, but adjourned from time to time, and eventually dropped.

I regions alleds Trucks, a continue, and inspire endidence, was however, all well in it is, the fest during and pray that was needed to restore their months ease a section by a nature bedong over betterning; but so far from any decision At 1 at the file me of Congeneral, the mercury hang taken, delays and disputes larged with go in the Countries thy today over; for the configuration-chief. Sir to a law by the egg, and therepaire from Hertie Money, could not be spored to take Are to relate there by of any cross territle head of the bring, become his rate entertaining the best system of only fall over the fine in our of the supremary in council of by a secret of the a Salmer's by or larger has una up appeared there of the president grades to the role of March St. W. wer, recently served from England with a highelse relativities, recent relations in terms. In I regiment like the troper, was desired to so relation in any who letter to home of except courses the minimized, but he positively Stand of the firm be described in the Munn, of uniting the main hely with that the Min by the Munn, and uniting the main hely with that the Munn of the Country United Standard Colours and the Country Colours and the Country Colours and the Country Colours and the Colour I need to be less described by extending from Bollie, or the distinct site of Conjeverum, the starts the restriction of the more and strongly used the adoption of the more warried on and an investor the property of and more mable every expressed by the minority, with the man have, to ather that it is a never to be exceeded in the borne with the beest poswhich is the section of the Logic sear the able delay on ht. Thomas Mount. Moure, ast in The westel of grantity, section of welled to his project, determined to take the equivalence of course of powers, where the fell in a real and returnly proposed of the there is a they end to eather an investment over and extract that he should appoint a configuration, where exercit of his the course has a manner to entury his real in council to the extingency, while contain to, do not it were it contained vacant. The opposito rear 40 to toll spread of nore descent on tembers indignantly reproduced this All an a wireless I of easily and easily or merangenent; and one of them (Mr. Sadstartey, from early to both mated paths for, so provided the majority, that they fether turn to this surply describer; the decreed his surpression, which was followed busined from the enfort he mother home up by a challenge from Sir Hector. axis in the terent, unable so turch as to! The subsequent conduct of the campaign which here't return infant from the tramp (corresponded with this inauspicious comto g harfa of the enerting horses. Yes it mencement. In the very face of the enemy, Hyder was indeed at Lond; deare clouds when from Cape Comorin to the Kistna of emoke, may read with thame, were the outer all was plander, confusion, and bloodshed, burbangers of his approach. The country-the civil and military authorities continued people fled, will militarious, to Madras; to quarrel with each other. Munro perand no less than 30 states were suffered to fristed in attempting the junction of the take up there aboute in the black town in tecaps in the centre of a country occupied the space of three days.

dently of the first importance. There was men, of whom 2,481 were European infantry no lack of men or ammunition; but a and 294 artillery, and there awaited the prevous deficiency of discipline, and general discontent, engendered by the severe sixed of about 150 Europeans and 2,000 suffering inflicted by the non-payment of sepoys. Hyder was at the time engaged in

*The letro of the naboli alone, in 1776, was stated by Col. Matthews, before a Parl. Committee, to remount to 35,000 effective men. That of the pretisible for the utmost extent of arrears he could produce the completely equipped for the utmost extent of arrears he could provide function were on the brink of mutiny for want of pay. In 1777, a regiment completely equipped for the utmost extent of arrears he could provide funds to meet. The European officers and native troops under Colonel Fullation, were, at a service, and stationed a few miles from Hyder's frontier, seited Captain Campbell and their other officers, and were only brought to release them by sequence of Col. James, the commandant of Trichinopoly, who made himself personally responsible for the utmost extent of arrears he could provide funds to meet. The European officers and native troops under Colonel Fullation, were, at a few frontier, seited Captain Campbell and their other officers, and were only brought to release them by

Sand Sale Congration of estimat the Mr. Whitefull, Land Macked, two bad wast to be to better come Hyder refund to a copt the requisibility of earthe Alastic and progress created a range out the horndoor also desired by

by an enemy. He marched to Conjeveram The narmbling of the troops was evil with the main body, which comprised 5,200 arrears. A strong and united effort, by besieging Arcot; but his invariable policy—the local authorities, to relieve their wants from which the English general might have learned a useful lesson-of directing his Header, desiring to cut their way through chief energies to the most prominent danger, induced him to send the flower of the army, under Tippoo, to intercept the detachment under Baillie, which was accomplished at a spot about fifteen miles distant from Conjeveram.

After a severe conflict of several hours, Baillie succeeded in repelling his assailants, but with so much loss, that he sent word to the general he could not join him unless reinforced in such a manner as to be capable of resisting the opposition of the enemy. He suggested that Munro himself should advance to the resene; instead of which, the general thought fit again to divide his small army by sending forward a detachment under Colonel Fletcher, to strengthen that threatened by Tippoo.

The intelligence of Hyder regarding the plans and proceedings of the English, was as speedy and reliable as their information concerning him was tardy and misleading. His plot to surprise and destroy Colonel Fletcher on the march was, happily, neutralised by the discreet change of route ordered by that officer; and it is considered, that had the junction of the detachments been followed up, after a few hours' rest, by speedy movement, the conjoined troops might have made their way safely to Conjeveram. But needless delay gave time for Tippeo to fix cannon at a strong post on the road, and, worse still, for Hyder himself to advance in person and oppose their passage. The little band, both Europeaus and sepoys, sustained furious and repeated assaults with extraordinary steadiness, inspired with the hope that Munro would take advantage of the opportunity to relieve them by attacking the foe in the rear. Hyder was not without apprehensions on this score, which were heightened by the representations of the French officers in his service, especially of Lally and Pimorin.* The fate of the day hung in suspense until lines, and at once deprived them of ammunition, and disabled their guns; they never-

European mercenaries who had successively served cient to meet the present crisis. Hyder Niram Ali and Bassalut Jung, before entering the had followed up his success at Conjevernm service of Hyder. Pimorin was a French officer,

† Of eighty-six officers, thirty-six were killed, thirty-four wounded, and sixteen surrendered unburt. dewash, Vellore, Chingleput, and other bul-

the hostile ranks or perish in the attempt. But Colonel Fletcher lay dead on the field of battle, and Colonel Baillie, willing to save the lives of his brave companions, and despairing of relief from head-quarters, held up his handkerchief as a flag of trucc. An intimation of quarter being given, the English laid down their arms; but had no sooner done so than a fierce ouslaught was made by the enemy, and the whole of ; them would have been slain in cold blood, including even the native women and children who had accompanied the detachment, but for the interference of the French mer-Baillie was brought, stiff with cenaries. wounds, into the presence of his barbarous conqueror, and eventually perished in the prison of Seringapatam. About 200 Europeans were taken, of whom fifty were officers.† They were destined to linger long years in a captivity more terrible than death.

When tidings of this disaster reached

Conjeveram, Munro threw his heavy guns and stores which could not be removed, into a tank, and retreated from that place to Chingleput, where he hoped to procure a supply of rice for the army; but being disappointed by the conjoined effect of Hyder's alertness and his own want of precautionary measures, he retreated to Madras, general consternation and alarm prevailed, aggravated by the atter want of provisions, military stores, or funds even to pay the troops, European or native; the latter, in the service of Mohammed Ali, deserted in whole regiments simply for that reason. The state of things seemed hopeless, when the vigorous measures of the supreme government at Bengal gave a new turn to affairs. The unfaltering courage and clear perceptions of Hastings were never excrted more advantageously than at this crisis. He had already instituted a negotintion with the Nizani for the restoration of the Guntoor Circar, the chief bone of two of the tumbrils blew up in the English | contention; and he maintained a correspondence with the Mahratta ruler of Bernr. Moodajee Bhouslay, which had the effect theless maintained the contest for another of rendering that chief mawilling to cohour and a-balf. At the end of that time operate actively with his countrymen against but 400 men remained, many of them the English, though he did not care openly wounded; yet they still rallied round their to refuse joining the general confederacy. · Lally was the commander of a small body of But these measures were manifestly insuffi-

warks of the Carnatic, were wretchedly provisioned and closely blockaded; while the numerous forts under the direct control of the nabol, Mohammed Ali, were, for the most part, surrendered without a blow, from the various and often concurrent causes of disgust at an incapable and extortionate master, corruption, and despondency. Such was the news brought to Calentia by a swiftsailing ship, flying before the south-west In twenty-four hours the gov-11101180011. ernor-general's course was taken. Supplies of every description-of men, money, and provisions—were gathered in, and dispatched under the charge of the veteran general Sir Eyre Coote, whose very name was a host, and to whom the sole conduct of the war was to be entrusted; for Hastings, rightly deeming the emergency a justification for exerting the utmost stretch of authority, took upon himself to suspend Mr. Whitchill, the venul and incapable governor of Fort St. George.

On reaching Madras, Coote found at his disposal a force numbering altogether 7,000 men, of whom only 1,700 were Europeans. Despite the manifest disparity of numbers, he carnestly desired to bring Hyder to a regular engagement, believing that the afford to wait and bide his day of triumph. danger to be incurred by such a proceeding But Hyder was an old man now; a pamwould fall far short of that resulting from pered tyrant, accustomed to tread on the the waste of resources and dispiriting effects of the harassing hostilities carried on by his opponent in a country already desolated. The wary Mysoorean well knew the foe with whom he had now to cope, and neither taunts, threats, nor manœuvring, could induce him to risk a pitched battle. This very circumstance enabled the English to relieve Wandewash,* Permacoil, and other besieged places; but jonly for a time: the indefatigable foe marched off uninjured to blockade a different fortress, and Coote followed till his troops were well-nigh worn out. At length a seeming evil procured the long-desired engagement; for Hyder, encouraged by the presence of a French fleet on the coast, intrenched his army in a strong post near Cuddalore, close to the village called by Europeans Porto Novo, and strove to

* Wandewash was most gallantly defended by Lieut. Flint, who, notwithstanding very deficient resources, and without a single artilleryman, not only held his ground during seventy-eight days of open trenches against the flower of Hyder's army, but raised a little corps of eavalry, and procured provisions for his garrison and supplies for the main army.

† When urged by the British commander to decide the fortune of war by a pitched battle, Hyder intercept and cut off the supplies of the English, who had recently been repulsed in an attack on the pagoda of Chillambrum. Coote advanced boldly, and having discovered a means of approach for a portion of the troops by a passage through a ridge of sand-hills, formed by Hyder for his own use, the general contrived, by a series of simple yet skilful and admirably executed movements, to marshal his forces in the face of several heavy batteries, and finally succeeded, after a close and severe contest, in forcing the line of the enemy and fairly putting them to flight.

At the commencement of the battle (about nine o'clock on the morning of the 1st July, 1781), Hyder took up his position on a little hill commanding the scene of action, and there he sat until four in the afternoon, cross-legged, on a low stool, watching every movement made by or against the English, and so enraged by the unexpected progress of affairs, as to become stupid with vexation. Fourteen years before, when defeated by Colonel Smith, t he had been observed by the English officers, with cool self-possession, issuing orders for a retreat, in the manner of one who could necks of his fellow-beings; and he believed the time at length arrived to triumph over the power of the people by whom he had been long braved with impunity. The cup of revenge was at his lips; was it to be flung to the ground almost untasted? Considerations of this nature shut out from view all thought of personal danger, and rendered him deaf to the arguments offered to induce him to quit a position rapidly becoming extremely perilous. The nobles in attendance were silenced by the obscene abuse, always lavishly bestowed by their imperions master when out of temper; their horses and servants had disappeared in the general flight before the advancing foe; but Hyder remained seated until a groom, who through long and faithful service was in some sort a privileged man, came forward, and is said to have replied-" What! put my chargers, worth more than one hundred rupees each, in corrpetition with your cannon-balls, that only cost a few pice (halfpence.) No, no: you shall hear of me often, but see me never. I will keep you march-ing until your legs are as big as your bellies, and your bellies the size of your legs; and then you shall fight when I choose, not when you please.

1 At Trincomalee, in 1767. (See p. 318.)

blunt fidolity prevailed on him to rise, saying, "we will beat them to-morrow; in the meanwhile mount your horse." Hyder complied; and was out of sight in a few moments, leaving the discomfited group, around his stool of repentance, to save themselves as they best could. Luckily for them, the English had no cavalry wherewith to earry on the pursuit. The victory was, however, fraught with important consequences. It induced the hostile force to fall back upon Arcot. Sir Eyre Coote followed, and encouraged by previous success, ventured to attack Hyder near Polliloor, in a position which, besides great natural advantages, was held by the superstitious Mysoorean in particular estimation as a lucky spot, being that on which he had cut off the detachment under Baillie in the previous year. The British troops became furious at the sight of the unburied remaius of their fallen comrades; but insurmountable obstacles retarded their advance. They could not get at the enemy; two tumbrils broke (as on the previous occasion); and to make the confusion greater, Sir Hector Munro, having received a hasty rebuke from Coote, sullenly seated himself beneath the only tree in the plain, and refused to issue a single command. loss of the English was about 500 killed, including some officers; and the action would probably have terminated in a defcat, had their wily adversary suspected the existence of the dissension and confusion which temporarily prevailed in an army characterised by united action and steady discipline. campaign ended with the surprise of the Mysooreans at the pass of Sholingur, on the road to Vellore: their loss was estimated at 5,000 men; while that of the English fell short of 100.

Meanwhile, au important change had taken place at Madras in the nomination of Lord Macartney as governor and president of Fort St. George. The appointment of a man of acknowledged talent and strict integrity was, doubtless, a great step towards abolishing the systematic venality which had long disgraced the presidency; and the earnest and straightforward manner in which the new ruler applied himself to his arduous and invidious task, justified the expectations entertained on his behalf. But the difficulties which surrounded him were great beyond expectation.

drawing the legs of Hyder from under him, arrival in June, 1781. First, that the Carnatie, thrust his slippers on his feet, and with which Sir Thomas Rumbold had represented in a most penceful and promising condition, was actually occupied by a ruthless foe: secondly, that the means of defence had been vainly sought for by men possessed of the local experience in which he was of necessity wholly deficient; and thirdly, that the increasing searcity which prevailed through the Carnatie, threatened to terminate in a terrible famine. Macartney was called on to decide how best to meet these difficulties without elashing with the extraordinary powers vested in the brave and indefatigable, but peevish and exacting General Coote, and still more with the supreme authority wielded by the scemingly conciliatory, but really dietatorial and jealous Hastings.

> Lord Macartney brought to India intelligence of war with Holland; and despite the objections of Coote, who desired to see the whole force concentrated for the reconquest of Arcot, the Dutch settlements were attacked: Sadras, Pulient, and Negapatam successively taken; after which the troops of Hyder began to evacuate the forts which they had occupied in Tanjore. But these successes were soon followed by renewed disasters. A French fleet arrived on the Coromandel coast in January, 1782, and after intercepting several vessels bound to Madras with grain, landed 3,000 men at Porto Novo, where Tippoo speedily joined them with a large body of troops. An English and native detaelment, about 2,000 strong, statioued in Tanjore, under Colonel Brathwaite, misled by a system of false information earried on by the spies of Hyder, were surprised by a conjoined force under Tippoo and Lally, and after maintaining a desperate resistance for six-and-twenty hours, against an cnemy who outnumbered them twenty to one, were at length completely surrounded, and either slain or captured. The conclusion of a peace with the Mahrattas being officially announced at Madras in the month of June, gave an opportunity for opening a similar negotiation with Hyder. The terms on which it had been obtained were not, however, of a nature to induce so wary a politician to make important concessions. The English, he well knew, had purchased peace by the surrender of almost all they had been fighting for-that is, by reverting to the terms of the indignantly repudiated treaty of Poorunder; and even these condi-Disastrous news awaited his tions had been made through the instrumen-tality of the formidable and intriguing appeared of a mortal disease described as Sindia.* But Hyder desired an interval of tranquillity in which to settle a plan of combined operations with the French admiral Suffrein; he therefore proceeded to treat! with Sir Eyre Coote, who remained in suspense until the vakeel from Mysoor was suddenly withdrawn, and the old general discovered that his whole stock of provisions had been consumed, while the troops were kept in a state of inactivity by the artifice of Hyder. The subsequent attempts of the English to force a battle were unavailing; and matters grew from bad to worse, until towards the close of the year, Coote, who had previously sustained a fit of apoplexy, now suffered a fresh seizure, which compelled him to resign the command to general Stuart, and retire to Bengal. Madras was by this time reduced to a terrible condition. The ravages of famine, after spreading over the whole Carnatic, t at length became felt in the presidency, and increased with alarming rapidity, until the number of deaths amounted to, and continued for several weeks, at from 1,200 to 1,500. The French appear to have been ignorant of the state of affairs; for they made no attempt to blockade the coast; and supplies from Bengal and the Northern Circurs came in time to aid in preventing the scourge of pestilence from following the ravages of famine. Hyder Ali had ever been accurately informed regarding the condition of every leading English settlement, and would doubtless have not failed to take advantage of the condition of the capital of the presidency, but that his marvellous energies of mind and body, so long vouchsafed, so terribly misused, were His health had been for some fast failing. time declining, and, in November, symptoms

* The price paid to Sindia was the surrender of the city of Broach and its dependencies. The arrangements referred to (commonly known as the Treaty of Salbye) were concluded in May, 1782.

† An eye-witness pathetically describes the manner in which the actives, "whose very excess and luxury, in their most plentcous days, had fallen short of our severest fasts-silent, patient, resigned without sedition or disturbance, almost without complaint," perished in multitudes .- (Mcodie's Transactions.)

‡ It is said that Hyder, like Hamilcar, swore his son to wage incessant war against the English; but the truth of this assertion is doubtful.

§ The age of Hyder is very differently stated. Wilks (the best general authority regarding Mysoor) states that he was seven years old in 1728, which would make him about sixty at the time of his death; but Mill and other writers unanimously speak of him as attaining a far more advanced tion to signify sovereignty obtained over the tigerage; and the careful and accurate Thornton like passions of the flesh.—(Wilks' Mysoor, ii., 667.)

peculiar to natives of high rank, and therefore called the raj-poora, or royal boil. He died at Chittore, in December, 1782, ‡ leaving Tippoos to prosecute hostilities with the English. The defalcation of the Mahrattas had, it is said, led him to regret the confederacy he had formed, and even to regard it as the most impolitic act of his whole career. "I have committed a great error," he exclaimed with bitterness; "I have purchased a draught of scandce|| (worth about a farthing) at the price of a lac of pagodas. I can ruin their resources by land, but I cannot dry up the sea." It would have been well for his successor had he profited by this dear-bought experience; but Tippoo, fierce, headstrong, and bigoted, was the last person in the world to gain wisdom on such easy terms. A leading characteristic of Hyder had been perfect toleration to every religious sect. Though quite capable of respecting the genuine picty of such a man as Swartz, he appears to have been himself devoid of any belief whatever; and alternately countenanced and joined in the ceremonial observances of the Mohammedans and Hindoos, and even the grossest forms of idolatry, superstition, and magical incantation performed by the latter, simply from motives of policy.

His crueltics, great and terrible as they were, resulted from the same cause, excepting only those prompted by his unbounded sensuality. Tippoo Sultan, on the contrary, had all the insatiable ferocity of the wild beast whose name he bore, when the fear-ful relish for human blood has once been acquired; and none of his victims could have suggested a more appropriate badge than the stripe of the royal tiger, which formed part of his insignia. With him, the fiendish describes him as little younger than Aurungzebe.

| Date wine, a cheap but very intoxicating liquor. | Mysoor, ii., 373. Col. Wilks gives this strange confession on the authority of Poornea, the Hindoo minister, to whom it was addressed. Hyder, it must be recollected, had no ally on whom he could rely. The Mahrattas had forsaken him, and from the French he could only receive very partial aid, since he had predetermined, under no circumstances, to admit them in force to Mysoor.—(Idam, 374.) At a very critical period (March, 1782), Hyder resented the attempt of a French officer to take possession of Chillambrum, by turning him out of the fort, and the troops, having no bullocks, were actually compelled to drag their artillery back to Porto Novo!

Tippoo Sultan is thought to have been named after a famous ascetic for whom Hyder Ali had a regard, and who had assumed this strange designadelight of inflicting pain and degradation, had proceeded to repel the incursions physical and moral, seems to have been an instinct developed even in early boyhood.

In vain the stern reprimands of his dreaded father were frequently sounded in his ears; in vain the repeated infliction of corporal punishment by the long whips, which Hyder declared to be better security for good government than all the reading and writing in the world;—Tippoo could never be restrained from indulging the vicious tendencies which subsequently found vent in the form of religious persecution. He persisted in inflicting the outward mark of Islam on such Christians as fell in his power,* and insulted the pcaecful Hindoo subjects of his father by wantonly defiling their places of worship, and slaying the animals they hold most sacred, especially the sacred bulls, which he recommended to his associates as the best possible beef. Yet Tippoo, staneh Mussulman as he deemed himself, and sworn foe to idolatry, was not the less a slave to the gross superstitions of which the Brahminical creed of modern times is so largely composed; and, like Hyder himself, he rarely failed, in commencing a difficult and dangerous undertaking, to have the jebbum—a strange species of magical ineantation-performed on his behalf by the Hindoos, simultaneously with the offering up of prayers for success in the mosques. † Add to these characteristics that of an irrepressible tendency for pilfering and lying, and we have, perhaps, about as detestable a person as can well be conceived. In activity in battle, he is said to have surpassed his father, and to have equalled him in personal daring; but in every other more needful capacity of a despotic ruler, he was His uncontested immeasurably inferior. succession was ensured by the manœuvics of two Brahmins, the ehicf ministers of Hyder,t who concealed the death of the sovereign as long as possible, in order to give his heir time to return from his post on the western frontier of Mysoor, whither he

• When a youth, his father punished him severely for having inflicted circumcision on an English soldier, at a time when he was anxious to conciliate

the good-will of the Madras presidency.

† The Jebbum, though purely a Hindoo cercmonial, was frequently resorted to by Mohammedans; one, of which the details are on record, is said to have cost Mohammed Ali £5,000, which he did not grudge, since it killed Lord Pigot; and another, after several failures, produced the death of Hyder himself.—(Wilks' Mysoor, ii., 255.)

The chief ministers, relatively speaking; for Hyder was himself the acting head of every department.

of the English under Coloncl Humberstone. Lord Macartney, on learning the late event, earnestly pressed the commander-in-chief (General Stuart) to take immediate advantage of the confusion likely to arise from a change of ruler. here again the spirit of disunion, which prevailed to so remarkable an extent in the Madras presidency, forbade speedy and combined action. The general claimed to be allowed to exercise the same independent authority bestowed by the supreme government on Sir Eyre Coote, and the governor contended, as Hastings had done in Bengal, for the entire subordination of the military to the civil authority. The general, to vindicate his alleged right, took the course natural to an opiniated and narrow-minded man, of acting in direct opposition to the instructions given by the presidency; and during the remainder of this the first war with the new ruler of Mysoor, the very spirit of discord ruled in the senate, the eamp, and the field, neutralising every suceess, and aggravating every disaster. the urgent solicitations of Hastings, Coote was again induced to return to the Carnatic; although, before his departure from thence, some serious disputes had taken place between him and Lord Maeartney, notwithstanding the eare evinced by the latter to act in the most conciliatory manner. But the ill-defined authority vested in the Supreme Council of Bengal, in conjunction with the personal misunderstanding which unhappily existed between Hastings and Macartney,§ tended to mingle personal feelings with public questions; and the dissensions between them increased in violence, until the governor-general took the resolve not only of delegating to Sir Eyrc Coote the uncontrolled conduct of the war, but also, in the event of determined resistance at Fort St. George, of enforcing that measure by the deposition of the president. The death of Coote, four days after landing at Madras,

§ The spotless integrity of Lord Macartney was a standing reproach to Hastings, who in dealing with him completely lost his temper. Thus, in a commu-nication dated 13th of April, 1783, he desires Lord May artney to explain some misunderstanding which had arisen on an official subject, adding as a reason, "if you consider the estimation of a man [the governor-general of India writing to the head of a subordinate presidency!] so inconsiderable as I am deserving of attention."—(Life, ii., 63.)

|| During the voyage, Coote was chased for two days and nights by a French ship of the line; and the agitation caused thereby accelerated his death.

DIV. X.

land. This intelligence, at an equally opportune moment, reached the troops engaged in the defence of Mangalore, which, though a place of very inferior strength, had stood a siege of fifty-six days, the defence being directed by Colonel Campbell, the attack by Tippoo himself, who had proceeded thither with the main body after taking Bednore. The French envoy, Peveron, is accused of having kept back the intelligence he came to bring, in order to enable Tippoo to retain the aid of Cossigny (the French engineer), Lally, and Boudenot. The declaration could, at length, be no longer Cossigny quitted the Mysoor withheld. army, and insisted on his companions withdrawing likewise. Tippoo was beyond measure curaged by what he considered nothing short of treacherous desertion; and his late allies, as the sole means of escaping unhurt by his resentment, were glad to avail themselves of the protection of the English. After some musuccessful attempts to carry the place by his own unassisted strength, he agreed to an armistice, to extend over the const of Malabar. One leading condition was the supply of a stated monthly allowance of provisions to Mangalore, sufficient for the use of the garrison without trenching on their previous stock. This stipulation was broken by his furnishing articles deficient in quantity and deleterious in quality: no salt was sent, and many of the sepoys, Colonel Wilks affirms, became actually blind, as well as affected by various other ailments, in consequence of being compelled to eat rice in its simple, undigestible state, without the addition of any of the usual condiments. Madras government were extremely anxious to conclude a peace; and to this circumstance, as also to the want of union among those in command, may be attributed the supincuess of General Macleod and the seruples which prevented his effective interposition for the succour of Mangalore, which, after nearly a nine months' siege, fell before its cruel and perfidious foe. Colonel Campbell died soon after, overwhelmed with fatigue and disappointment. Tippoo had succeeded in his immediate object of proving to the native Indian powers his sufficiency to effect that which had baffled the skill and discipline of his French auxiliaries; in every other respect he had little reason to conconsiderable place, purchased by a long and costly siege, which, besides having hindered his attention to the affairs of his own the source of the matter in broken English, by declaring "General Stuart catch one Lord [Pigot], one Lord [Macartney] catch General Stuart."

† Messer, Eadleir, Staunten, and Hudlesten.

dominions, had left the English free to gain considerable advantages in other quarters. The misconduct of General Stuart, in the expedition to Cuddalore, had filled the measure of his offences, and induced the governor and council to order his arrest and forcible embarkation for England.* this decisive measure matters took a different and far more favourable turn.

The abilities of Mr. Sulivan, the resident at Tanjore, and of colonels Lang and Fullarton, had been successfully exerted in various ways. Caroor and Dindegul, Palgaut and Coimbatore, were captured; and Colonel Fullarton was even preparing to ascend the Ghauts and march on Seringapatam, when he received tidings of a treaty of peace concluded between Tippoo Sultan and the Madras government, on the basis of a mutual restoration of conquests. The socalled peace was, however, but a hollow truce, to which nothing but fear of the Mahrattas and the Nizam had driven the sultan. Throughout the whole of the negotiations he behaved in the most insulting manner to the British commissioners, † who had been inveigled to his court to be held up in the light of suitors for peace; and even when the treaty was concluded, the fulfilment of his pledge of restoring his captives to liberty, gave fresh occasion for resentment, by revealing the treatment to which they had been subjected. Hyder had shown little humanity in his dealings with English prisoners, whom he kept in irons, chained in pairs, because "they were muruly beasts, not to be kept quiet in any other way." But Tippoo Sultan far surpassed his father in barbarity, and the English learned, with horror and indignation, that many officers distinguished by rank, skill, or bravery, had been poisoned or assassinated in their dungeous; that others, especially the younger of these unfortunates, had suffered torture and ignominy of a revolting description; and that even the most fortunate among the captives had sustained close confinement in loathsome dens, their beds the damp ground; with food so miserably insufficient, as to give scope for the untiring fidelity and self-devotion of their native companions in affliction, to show itself by the frequent sacrifice of a portion of the scanty pittance allowed for their maintenance, in return for [usurping nabobs of Oude had asserted the unremitting labour, to mend the fare of the European soldiers.*

One of the sons of Mohammed Ali expressed his

The treaty entered into with Tippoo by the Madras authorities was transmitted to Bengal, and signed by the Supreme Council, on whom the full powers of government had devolved, owing to the absence of Mr. Hastings at Lucknow. On his return to Calentin, Hastings found much fault with the treaty, especially because it made no mention of the nabob of Arcot. He drew up a new one, and peremptorily commanded the Madras authorities to forward it to Tippoo. Macartney positively refused compliance; Hastings could not compel it; and so the matter ended.

CLOSE OF HASTINGS' ADMINISTRATION .-Before the commencement of the war with Hyder, the financial condition of every one of the three presidencies had become seriously embarrassed. In August, 1780, the Supreme Council had been under the necessity of contracting a new debt, and when to this heavy burden on the Bengal revenues an additional one was added by the costly military operations required for the defence of the Carnatic, the governor-general felt compelled to announce to the directors the probability of a total suspension of the investment, unless the purchase-money were sent from England. Nothing short of the most absolute necessity could, however, induce Hastings to endanger his standing with the Court of Proprietors, by the execution of so unpopular a measure, while any source of supply remained available; yet such as there were had been already severely The nabob of Oude and the rajah of taxed. Viewed in Benares were tributary princes. this light, they were bound in all cases of difficulty to furnish assistance to the superior and protecting state. The degree of cooperation to be afforded was an open question, which Mr. Hastings, who now held undisputed sway in Bengal, thought fit to decide in person, and, with that intent, proceeded to the wealthy, populous, and venerated city of Benares. The rajah, Cheyte Sing, was the son and successor of Bulwunt Sing, whose alliance the English had courted during the war with Shuja Dowlah.

* Their exemplary conduct is the more deserving of admiration from the severe trials to which their fidelity had been recently exposed, as recorded in the pages of Wilks, Fullarton, and other military authorities. The mismanagement of the finances of the Carnatic had told fearfully on the condition of the army; even veteran sepoys, who had served un- lish Interests in India, 1782 to 1784; pp. 98-201.)

claim of the sword over the district of which Benares forms the capital, on the plea of its being a district dependent on their government. Bulwunt Sing made common cause with the English; and on the conclusion of peace, an article was expressly inserted to secure him from the vengeance and cupidity of the nabob-vizier. This proved increasingly difficult; until at length, in 1774, it was proposed by Mr. Hastings, as the sole mode of protecting the rajah, to insist on his being declared independent of Oude, and tributary to Bengal. A stated sum was fixed to be paid annually, and the Supreme Council unanimously decreed that no more demands of any kind should be made upon him on behalf of the company. Cheyte Sing forwarded the tribute to Patna with remarkable regularity; nevertheless, in 1778, the necessities of the presidency were considered to justify a demand for a heavy contribution (five lacs of rupces) to be furnished immediately. The rajah pleaded poverty, and asked for time: but troops were sent against him, and he was compelled to furnish the sum originally demanded, with a fine of £2,000 for military expenses. He had, unhappily, incurred the personal camity of the governor-general, by courting Clavering and Francis during their brief day of power; and the offence was one Hastings was little disposed to let pass unpunished. In 1780, the system of exaction commeuced against Cheyte Sing, was continued by a new demand of five lacs, from which he eudeavoured to gain relief by arguments and supplications, enforced by a private offering of two lacs, which Mr. Hastings accepted, not as a part of the contribution, but as a distinct item, and then proceeded as before to exact the five lacs, with an additional mulct or fine of £10,000, for the trouble of compelling pay-In 1781, the unfortunate rajah was again importuned for supplies of money and troops; but this time unreasonable demands appear to have been made, simply with the object of provoking conduct which was to serve as a plea for the complete confiscation of his whole possessions. The amount now demanded was not to be less than fifty lacs, with The rajah bea contingent of 1,000 men. der Clive, were but imperfectly, if at all provided for. Colonel Fullarton expressly states, that the natives under his command were nearly twelve months in arrear, and that many were driven to such extremities as to be compelled to sell their children into slavery to save themselves from starvation .- (View of Eng

haved with remarkable moderation: he doubt- | Cheyte Sing had, however, no thought of less guessed the views entertained by Has- organised operations against his persecutor, tings-either the seizure of his forts with and he sent repeated apologies, and offers their contents, or the sale of his dominions of the most complete submission, all of to the ruler of Oude; and he left no means which were treated with contemptuous disuntried to avert, by submission, evils which regard. it was hopeless to combat by force. On the continued to increase; the building in which approach of the governor-general, he went the English party had taken up their abode to meet him with every demonstration of was blockaded, and the sole means of conrespect; and, in token of entire submission, veying intelligence to Bengal was by the laid his turban on the lap of the reserved subtlety of native messengers, who, taking and impassive Englishman, the last act of advantage of the custom of laying aside in lumiliation in a country, where, to be hare- | travelling their large golden carrings, because headed, is considered unspeakable degrada- I tempting to thieves, placed on this occasion haps it accelerated the extreme measures in the orifice, but dispatches from Hasadopted by Hastings, who asserted that he- tings to the commanders of British troops to sides falsely pleading poverty, the rajah was come to his resene. Before these orders really plotting to become perfectly indepen- could be executed, affairs assumed a still dent of the presidency; but to this charge more menacing aspect. A slight skirmish, his youth and inexperience afford the best brought on by a premature attack made contradiction, when viewed in conjunction lay an English officer, at the head of a with the nuresisting manner in which he small hody of men, on Hamnagur, a forsuffered the governor-general to take pos- tified palace beyond the river, terminated session of Benares, though attended by a in the death of the leader, and many of his very slender escart, and even to go the followers by the hands of the people of Belength of arresting and confining him to his mares. The survivors retreated; and Havown palace. placed on guard there, were not provided | night to the fortress of Chunar, leaving the with ammunition, so little was any resis- wounded sepoys behind. tauce anticipated on the part of this incipient | spread for hundreds of miles; the husbandrebel. The people were expected to witness, with indifference, the change of rulers. On loom, and rallied round Corrie Sing; the the contrary, they were rendered desperate by an aggression which involved the downfall | the misgovernment of Asuf Dowlah and his of one of their own race and religion, to be | English allies; and even Bahar wented ripe followed by the transfer of the sacred city for revolt. The minh of length arounced a and its fertile environs into the hands of hanghty and defiant trace but the absence aliens, who had no sympathics with their of skill or discipling readered the tuning creed, and no interest in their welfare. thary force thus relatively assembled utterly Great crowds assembled round the palace incapable of taking the field against a Euroand blocked up all the avenues; and before pean army, and the treeps, under Major reinforcements with ammunition could ar- Popham, nere everywhere victorious rive to support the sepoy guard, a furious fastnesses of the right were stormed, his attack had been made, in which the greater adherents, to the number of 20,000, for expant perished. The rajah, so far from com- his standard, and returned to their column. ing forth to head the mob, took advantage avocations, while their late ruler quitted the of the confusion to make his escape, and country for perpetual exilewas let down the steep bank of the Ganges, lanuexed to the British dominions. hy means of turbans tied together, into save appearances, a relation of the save a hoat schiele conveyed him and a boat which conveyed him to the opporate was appointed rajah, but, he site shore. The multitude rushed after nabob of Bengal, he became a negacity paint, leaving the palace to be occupied by diary, removable at the pleasure of the English troops. Had they at once are still and they at once are still and they are not st the English troops. Had they at once pro-sidency. This tyranneal provided obceeded in search of Hastings, no effective re-pletely failed in promoting the first sistance could have been offered, since he had jeet of Hastings—the attent enhance the no protection beyond that of the thirty gen-sum of ready money; for research the tlemen of his party and fifty armed sergers, the indignities used in the

The numbers of the insurgents This conduct did not check, per- not the ordinary quill or roll of blank paper The two companies of sepoys tings, alarmed for his own safety, fled by The excitement man quitted the field, the manufacturer his oppressed population of Outle rate against persous as well as the wardrobes of the mother, I from them; and be found himself unable to wife, and other females of the family of Cheyte Sing (in violation of the articles of capitulation), the booty realised was not only unexpectedly small (£250,000 to £300,000), but was wholly appropriated as prize-money by the army.* Thus the immediate effect of the expedition was to cnhance the difficulties it was intended to relieve, by the expenses attendant on putting down a revolt wantonly provoked; and so far from meeting the approbation of the company, the conduct pursued towards the raish was denounced as "improper, unwarrantable, and highly impolitic." Nevertheless, the war into which Cheyte Sing bad been driven was held to justify his expulsion from Benares; and the positive declaration of Hastings, that an order for the reinstatement of the rajah would be regarded by him as the signal for his own instant resignation of office, probably prevented any step being taken to make amends for past wrongs.

The next expedient adopted to fill the empty treasury of Calcutta, was more successful in its results, but, if possible, more discreditable in character. Asuf-ad-Dowlab, the successor of Shuja Dowlah, was a young man, not devoid of a certain description of ability+ and kindly feeling; but his better qualities were neutralised by an amount of indolence and sensuality, which rendered him a political nobody in the sight of the presidency, and a severe scourge to his subjects by reason of the cxtortions and cruelty perpetrated in his name | ranteed by the Supreme Council of Bengal, by unworthy favourites. coucessions (such as the Benares tribute) had been extorted from him, which Hastings would never have so much as proposed to his father; and these, together English resident at Lucknow, was approved with general misgovernment and extravagance, had reduced the treasury of Oude to a condition which left its master little to fear from the rapacity of his neighbours. Continued drought had heightened his distress, by diminishing the power of the people to meet the heavy taxation demanded former promises by empowering the nabob

 Hastings would seem to have outwitted himself in this matter. The wife of Cheyte Sing was a person of high character, much-beloved and esteemed. and safety and respect for her person, together with those of the other ladies of the family of the ill-fated rajah, were among the express terms of capitula-tion. Yet Hastings was unmanly enough to question the "expediency of the promised indulgence to the ranee," and to suggest that she would "contrive to defraud the captors of a considerable portion of the mander-in-chief was £36,000.—(Mill, Moodie, &c.) booty, by being suffered to retire without examina-

pay any portion of the arrears of bis own mutinous troops, much less to maintain the costly detachment and the long train of officials, civil as well as military, forced upon bim by the English.

In an evil hour be sought counsel with the governor-general at Chunar, pleaded poverty, and gave as one, among many reasons for inability to fulfil the heavy conditions into which he bad been led to enter, the large proportion of his father's wealth bequeathed to his mother and grandmother. These princesses had been uniformly treated by Shuja Dowlah with the highest consideration and respect: his wife, especially, had won bis entire confidence hy repeated evidences of energetic and devoted affection. During his lifetime the chief direction of his pecuniary affairs had been entrusted to her management, and, after his death, the two ladies remained in possession of certain extensive jaghires, with other property, to a large extent; not for their exclusive use, but for the maintenance of the rest of his family and those of preceding nabobs, amounting (including female retainers of all kinds) to about 2,000 persons. The profiigate prince had early coveted the inheritance of his relatives, and he continued to exact contributions from them, until his mother, wearied and alarmed by his importunities and injurious treatment, consented to surrender an additional sum of thirty lacs, on condition of his signing a formal pledge, gua-Already sundry that she should be permitted to enjoy her jaghires and effects exempt from further persecution. This covenant, effected through the mediation of Bristowc, the of and confirmed by the majority then dominant in Calcutta. Hastings disapproved, but heing in the minority, could offer no effective opposition. In 1781, when his authority became again (for a time) supreme, he scrupled not to set aside all > tion." The intimation did not pass unheeded. The defenceless ladies were subjected to the insulting search of four females, but with what effect does not appear; and their persons were further insulted by the licentious people and followers of the camp. the officers and soldiery maintained that Hastings had expressly made over to them the whole profits of † Vide the charming stanzas translated by Heber.

to take possession of the jaghires of both commencement of the year 1782. alleged fault - of embarrassing the goverument of the nabob-was contradicted by the statements repeatedly forwarded by the English resident, of the persecutions endured by them at the hands of the local authori-Asuf-ad-Dowlah (who, ever since the covenant signed in 1775, had been repeatedly violating it in different ways) was at first delighted at having his refractory relatives deprived of the protection to which they had constantly appealed; but on quitting Chunar, and regaining his own dominions, he began to consider the matter in a dif-Unsupported by the plausible ferent light. reasoning of Hastings, the proposed plan of despoiling his mother and grandmother appeared fraught with ignominy; and Mr. Middleton (who had been recently restored to the position of British resident) described, in the strongest terms, the almost unconquerable repugnance evinced by the nabob towards the violent measures agreed on at He was peremptorily informed, that in the event of his continued refusal, the seizure of the jaghires and personal property of the begums would be accomplished by the English without his co-operation. The weak and vacillating prince, fearful of the effect such an assumption of authority by foreigners might produce on the minds of his subjects, reluctantly consented to accompany the expedition sent to attack the princesses in their own territory, in the * Middleton's defence. Vide House of Commons

Papers, March, 1781; and Mill's India, vol. iv. The account of these disgraceful proceedings is very fragmentary, but amply sufficient to warrant the assertions made in the text. Three principal facts are on record. The first is a letter from Middleton to the English officer on guard, dated January, 1782, desiring that the eunuchs should "be put in irons, kept from all food," &c. The second is a letter from the same officer to the president, pleading the sickly condition of his prisoners as a reason for temporarily removing their chains, and allowing them to take a little exercise in the fresh air. This was refused, and the captives were removed to Lucknow. The third communication, addressed still by one company's servant to another, is a direct order for the admission of torturers to "inflict corporal punishment"

princesses, as a means of paying his debts town and castle of Fyzabad (the second to the company; and, as a further assistance, place in Oude) were occupied without bloodthe English troops, whose maintenance shed, the avenues of the palace blocked up, pressed heavily on the Oude revenues, were and the begums given to understand that to be withdrawn. Mr. Hastings asserted, no severities would be spared to compel in justification of his conduct, that the the complete surrender of their property. begums had evinced an inclination to take But here a serious obstacle presented itself. part with Cheyte Sing; but the accusa- Even Middleton doubted what description tion is improbable in itself, and unsup- of coercion could be effectually adopted, ported by any reliable evidence: their other without offering an offence of the most unpardonable description to the whole native population; for the ladies were hedged in by every protection which rank, station, and character could confer, to enhance the force of opinion which, on all such occasions, is in the east so strong and invariable, "that no man, either by himself or his troops, can enter the walls of a zenana, scarcely in the case of acting against an open enemy, much less the ally of a son acting against his own mother."* In this dilemma it was deemed advisable to work upon the fears and sympathies of the begums in the persons of their chief servants, two cunuchs, who had long been entrusted with the entire management of their affairs. There is, perhaps, no page in Anglo-Indian history so deeply humiliating to our national feelings, as that which records the barbarities inflicted on these aged men, during a period of nearly twelve mouths. Certainly no other instance can be found equally illustrative of the false varnish which Hastings habitually strove to spread over his worst actions, than the fact that, after directing the mode of dealing with the cunuchs-by rigorous confinement in irons, total deprivation of food, and, lastly, by direct torture;† after inciting the indirect persecution of the princesses and the immense circle of dependants left to their charge by the nabob-vizier, by cutting off their supplies of food and necessaries: 1-after quarrelling with and dismisson two aged prisoners accused of excessive fidelity to their mistresses; and lest the feelings of a British officer should rise against the atrocities about to be inflicted, an express injunction was added, that the executioners were to have "free access to the prisoners, and to be permitted to do with them whatever they thought proper."—(Idem.)

† The women of the zenana were at various times on the eve of perishing for want; and on one occasion the pangs of hunger so completely overpowered the the pages of numbers of constant of verpowered the ordinary restraints of custom, that they burst in a body from the palace and begged for food in the public bazaar, but were driven back with blows by the sepoys in the service of the E. I. Cy.—(Dr. Moodie's Transactions, p. 455.) Major Gilpin, the commandant of the guard, humanely advanced 10 0001 mayor for the relief of these unfortunates. 10,000 rupees for the relief of these unfortunates.

ing his favourite employé Middleton, for hav- | Hastings strongly deprecated this equitable ing been backward in conducting a business measure. He urged that the evidence from which a gaoler of Newgate prison offered under such circumstances would be might turn with disgust,-he, nevertheless, when it became advisable to adopt lenient measures (since no further payments could be extorted by cruelty), had the consummate jeet by many characteristic arguments, such hypocrisy to remove the guard from the palace (of the begums, and release the eunuelis, on justice to challenge complaint. A comprothe express understanding that their suffer- mise was effected; the nabob, at his own ings had proceeded from the nabob and urgent desire, was permitted to restore the his ministers, but their release from his jaghires wrested from his relatives; while own compassionate interference. The previous ill-feeling justly entertained by the this scanty justice, "made a voluntary conprincesses and their adherents against Asufad-Dowlah, probably lent some counte- shares" of the newly-restored rents. nance to this untruth; and the commanding officer by whom the cunuchs were set at tance in the administration of Warren liberty, described, in glowing terms, the | Hastings. † Various causes appeared to have lively gratitude expressed by them towards their supposed liberator. "The enlargement of the prisoners, their quivering lips and The absence of his wife, to whom he was tears of joy, formed," writes this officer, "a tenderly attached, and his own failing truly affecting scene." He adds a remark, | health, had doubtless their share in renwhich could searcely fail to sting the pride, if not the conscience, of one so susceptible of eensure in disguise-"If the prayers of in the council-board calculated to destroy these poor men will avail, you will, at the the despotic power essential to the policy of last trump, be translated to the happicst a ruler, whose measures, however eleverly regions in heaven."* In the benefits to be planned and boldly executed, were rarely of derived from the recent despoliation, a character to bear impartial, much less Hastings hoped to share largely, for he expected that the E. I. Cy., in gratitude for an accession of £600,000 to their exhausted treasury, would cheerfully assent to his appropriation of the additional sum of £100,000, which he had actually obtained ! bonds for from Asnf-ad-Dowlah at Chunar. An extortion like this, committed at a time when the excessive poverty and heavy debts ing his habitual extravagance, to bring of the nabob-vizier, the clamours of his home a fortune avowedly not far short of unpaid troops, and the sufferings of the £100,000, apart from the costly jewels mass of the people, were held forth in extenuation of the oppression of his mother and grandmother, together with other acts of tyrannous aggression, needs no comment. The directors positively refused to permit his winning manner, and conversance with his detention of the money, and, moreover, commanded that a rigorous investigation should be instituted into the charges of disaffection brought against the begums; and that, in the event of their innocence being proved, restitution should be made.

Except a heavy exaction from Fyzoolia Khan.

sure to be favourable to persons whose cause should be so manifestly upheld by the company; and supported his views on the subas its being unsuitable to the majesty of the ladics, on their part, thankful for even eession of a large portion of their respective

This transaction is the last of any imporeoncurred to render him as anxious to resign as he had once been to retain his post. dering him weary of a task, the difficulties of which had been lately increased by a change hostile criticism. Beside these reasons, his opponents suggested that of recent private extortions from the nabob-vizier; and it cannot be forgotten, that although he pleaded urgent necessity as an inducement for the directors to suffer him to appropriate the bonds obtained at Chunar, yet, about three years later, he was enabled, notwithstandexhibited by Mrs. Hastings, and the wellfurnished private purse which there are grounds for believing her to have possessed. The prolonged administration of Hastings, native languages, together with the imposing effect of the state by which he had, from motives of policy, thought fit to surround himself, made a deep impression on the minds of the Indian population. I have myself met with ballads, similar to those alluded to by Heber and Macaulay, which commemorate the swift steeds and richlycaparisoned elephants of "Sahib Hushting;" they likewise record his victory over Nuncomar who refused to do him homage.

Parl. Papers, quoted by Mill, iv., 458.

† Letter of Hastings to council, 1784. They gave rich gifts to Mrs. Hastings, in the form of chairs and couches of exquisitely corved ivory, &c.

however, no mention of the accusation of but it is equally true, that the double-faced forgery, but resembles rather the scripture and grasping policy of the governor-general story of Haman and Mordecai, with a differeut ending. The Bengalees possibly never understood the real and lasting injury done them by Hastings, in fastening round their necks the chains of monopoly, despite the opposition of his colleagues, and contrary the E. I. Cy. than any external opposition. to the orders of the company. Once fully in operation, the profits of exclusive trade conviction which led him on one occasion to in salt and opium* became so large, that its renunciation could spring only from philanthropy of the purest kind, or policy of the broadest and most liberal character. his countrymen in India, Warren Hastings was in general popular. It had been his unceasing effort to purchase golden opinions; and one of the leading accusations brought against him by the directors, was the wilful increase of governmental expenses by the creation of supernumerary offices to provide for adherents, or to encourage those already in place by augmented salaries. His own adraissions prove, that attachment to his person, and unquestioning obedience to his commands, were the first requisites for subordinates; and the quiet perseverance with which he watched his opportunity of rewarding a service, or revenging a "personal lurt," is not the least remarkable feature in his character.

He quitted India in February, 1785. Notwithstanding the unwarrantable measures adopted by him to raise the revenues and lessen the debts of the company, he failed to accomplish these objects, and, on the contrary, left them burdened with an additional debt of twelve-and-a-half million, and a revenue which (including the provision of an European investment) was not equal to the ordinary expenses of the Doubtless, great eombined settlements.† allowance must be made for the heavy drain occasioned by the pressing wants of the Bombay and Madras presidencies, and decided commendation awarded for the energetic steps taken to avert the ruin in which the Mahratta war and the invasion of Hyder

The Indian version of the story makes, threatened to involve these possessions: tended to neutralise the benefit of his courage and decision, and, as in the ease of Lord Pigot, fomented, instead of allaying, the evils of dissension and venality, which were more destructive to the interests of

Had Hastings resolved to abide by the exclaim, that he "wished it might be made felony to break a treaty," the consequences would have been most beneficial both to India and to England, and would, at the same time, have saved him long years of humiliation and anxiety. He little thought that the Rohilla war, the sale of Allahabad and Oude, and the persecution of the begums, would rise in judgment against him on his return to his native land,—bar his path to titles and offices of state, and compel him to sit down in the comparatively humble position which had formed the object of his boyish ambition, as master of Daylesford, the ancient estate of his family.

But Francis, now a member of parliament, had not been idle in publishing the evil deeds which he had witnessed without power to prevent; and Burke, whose hatred of oppression equalled his sympathy for suffering, brought forward the impeachment as a question which every philanthropist, everyone interested in the honour of England or the welfare of India, was bound to treat as of vital importance. Political motives, of an exceptionable character, on the part of the ministers, favoured the promoters of the trial; and after many tedious preliminaries, Warren Hastings appeared at the bar of the House of Lords, and knelt before the tribunal of his country, in presence of one of the most remarkable assemblages ever convened in the great hall of William Rufus. Of the brilliant aristocracies of rank, talent, wealth, and beauty, of which England then boasted, few members were absent. queen and princesses had come to witness the impeachment of a subject known to

by the Chinese." Sulivan sold the contract to a Mr. Benn for £40,000; Benn to a Mr. Young for £60,000; and the latter reaped a large profit.—(Mill.)

^{*} The 12th article of impeachment against Hastings set forth, "that he granted to Stephen Sulivan, son of Lawrence Sulivan, chairman of the Court of Directors, a contract for four years for the provision of opium; that in order to pay for the opium so provided, he borrowed large sums at an interest of eight per cent., at a time when he declared the drug could not be exported with profit; and yet he sent it to China, which was an act of additional criminality, as

[†] A comparison of the receipts and disbursements of the year ending April, 1786, exhibited a deficit of about £1,300,000. The arrears of the army amounted to two million; and "the troops at Madras and Bombay were in a state of utter destitution, and some of them in open mutiny." The ascertained he knew that the importation of opium was prohibited | Bengal debt alone was about four million sterling.

have enjoyed no ordinary share of royal Advinistration or Lond Cornwallis,favour, and to listen to the charges urged The government of Lord Macartney termi-against him by the thrilling rloquence of nated in Madras about the same time as Burke, the solid reasoning of Fox, and that of Mr. Hastings in Bengal; and a high the exciting declamation of Sheridan. The testimony to the ability and unsulfied integtrial commenced with a strong feeling rity of the former gentleman, was afforded on the part of the public against the ne- by the offer of the position of governorcused; but it dragged on, like most state [general, which he declined accepting, unless proceedings, until people ceased to care how accompanied by a British peerage. it ended. At length, after reven years spent in law proceedings of a most tedious lif granted, it would convey to the public character, the wrongs inflicted in a distant | un impression that a premium was necesclime, and at a distant period, became sary to induce persons of consideration in almost a matter of indifference: a sort of England to fill the highest office in India, sympathy, such as is often felt for acknow- and the appointment was consequently conledged criminals, took the place of lively ferred on Lord Cornwallis. To him was indignation; and when the inquiry ended centrusted the charge of carrying into exein the acquittal of Hastings, he was ention some important alterations contemgenerally believed to have been sufficiently plated by the act of parliament passed in punished by the insuperable obstacles which 1781; and by means of an express provision his peculiar position had imposed to prevent lin the net of 1786, the powers of comhis selection for any public office, and by mander-in-chief were united in his person the ruinous condition to which his finances with that of the greatly enlarged authority had been reduced by the costly expenses, of legitimate and illegitimate, of the painful ordeal through which he had passed. The commenced a series of salutary and muchlaw charges alone exceeded £76,000. Prohably still larger sums were expended in vrious kinds of secret service-" in bribing newspapers, rewarding pamphleteers, and circulating tracts;" beside £12,000 spent in purchasing, and £48,000 in adorning, Daylesford: so that Hastings, when finally dismissed, turned from the bar of the House of Lords an absolute panper-worse than that—an insolvent debtor. The company came to his relief with an aunuity of £1,000 n-year, and a loan of .£50,000, nearly half of which was converted into a gift; and they continued to aid him at intervals, in his ever-recurring difficulties, up to the period of his death, in 1818, nged eighty-six.

† Lord Macartney, on taking possession of the office of president of Madras, made a formal statement of his property, and on quitting office presented to the company a precise account of the increase effected during the interval. The E. I. Cy. met him in the same trank and generous spirit by the gift of an annuity of £1,500. It is to be regretted that he lent the sanction of example to the vice of duelling, then frightfully prevalent, by a meeting with a member of council (Mr. Sadleir) with whom a misunderstanding had arisen in the course of official daty. On his return to England he was challenged by General Stuart, and slightly wounded. The records interfered, and the contest terminated, though

Macaulay's Essay on Hastings, p. 100.

Stuart declared himself unsatistied. 1 The establishment of a Board of Control, with other important measures, respectively advocated by other important measures, respectively and ocaled by Fox or Pitt, will be noticed in a subsequent section.

concession was refused, on the ground that, · immediately cut. . . : needed reforms, both as regarded the collection of revenue and the administration of justice. Mr. Macpherson, the senior member of council, who had temporarily presided over the affairs of government, had successfully exerted himself to diminish the waste of the public finances connived at by his predecessor; and Lord Comwallis set about the same task with a steadiness of principle and singleness of motive to which both Eng. lish officials and Indian subjects had been long unaccustomed. The two great measures which distinguish his internal policy, are the establishment of a fixed land-rent throughout Bengal, in exact accordance with the opinions of Francis; and the formation of a judicial system to protect property. The necessity of coming to some speedy settlement regarding the collection of territorial revenue, whether under the denomination of a rent or a tax, is the best apology for the necessarily imperfect character of the system framed at this period ou the sound principle of giving a proprietary right in the soil; but even a brief statement of the different views taken by the advocates of the zemindarree settlement, and of the opposite arguments of those who consider the right in the soil vested in the rvots or cultivators, would mar the continuity of the narrative.

§ Mr. Wheler was dead. Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Macpherson went to India, in 1766, as purser in a vessel commanded by his uncle, contrived to ingratiate himself with the nabob of Arcot, and re-turned to England as his agent. After a strange series of adventures, which it is not necessary to follow in detail, he rose to the position of acting governor-general, in which capacity he obtained for the company the valuable settlement of Penang or Prince of Wales' Island, by an arrangement with the King of Queda. His brief administration was likewise marked by a duel with Major Brown (on the Bengal establishment.) The Court of Directors, tired of witnessing the peace of their territories endangered by such proceedings, unanimously affixed the penalty of dismissal from the company's service to any person who should send a challenge on account of matters arising out of the discharge of their official duties.— (Auber's British India, ii., 39.)

The foreign policy of the governor-general was characterised by the novel feature of the reduction of the rate of tribute demanded from a dependent prince. Asuf-ad-Dowlah pleaded, that in violation of repeated treaties, a sum averaging eighty-four lacs per annum had been exacted for the company during the nine preceding years; and his arguments appeared so forcible, that Lord Cornwallis consented to reduce this sum to fifty lacs per annum, which he declared sufficient to cover the "real expenses" involved in the defence of Oude. Negligent, profuse, and voluptuous in the extreme, the nabobvizier was wholly dependent on foreign aid to secure the services of his own troops or the submission of his own subjects; he had therefore no alternative but to make the best terms possible with the English, and might well deem himself fortunate in finding the chief authority vested in a ruler whose actions were dictated by loftier motives than temporary expediency; and influenced by more worthy considerations than the strength or weakness of those with whom he had to The extreme dissatisfaction openly expressed by Englishmen in India, regarding the peace of 1784, and the insulting conduct of Tippoo, lcd the Mahrattas and the Nizam to believe that the E. I. Cy would gladly take part with them in a struggle against one whose power and arrogance were alarmingly on the increase; but their overtures were met by an explicit declaration, that the supreme government (in accordance with the recent commands of the British parliament) had resolved on taking India. no part in any confederacy framed for pur-Tippoo and the Mahposes of aggression. rattas therefore went to war on their own resources, and continued hostile operations for about a year, until the former was glad to make peace, on not very favourable terms, in order to turn his undivided attention to a portion of the territories usurped by his father, and enact a new series of barbarities on the miscrable inhabitants of the coast of The first measure by which this Malabar. barbarian signalised his accession to despotie sway, was the deportation of upwards of 30,000 native Christians from Canara. memory of the deeds of Cardinal Menezes, and other stanch supporters of the "Holy Inquisition," had not passed away; and Tippoo'affirmed, that it was the narrative of the intolcrance exercised by the "Portuguese Nazarencs" which caused "the rage of Islam to boil in his breast,"* and induced him to vent his wrath upon the present innocent generation, by sweeping off the whole of both sexes and every age into slavery, and compelling them to observe and receive the external rites of the Moslem creed. Of these unfortunates, not one-third are believed to have survived the first year of exile The brave mountaineers and degradation. of Coorg drew upon themselves the same fate by the constant struggles for liberty, to which they were incited by the odious tyranny of the usurper. Tippoo at length dealt with them in the manner in which a ferocious and half-crazed despot of early times did with another section of the Indian population.† The dominant class in Coorg had assembled together on a hilly, wooded tract, apart from the lower order of the peasantry (a distinct and apparently aboriginal race.) Tippoo surrounded the main body, as if enclosing game for a grand circular hunt; beat up the woods as if dislodging wild beasts; and finally closed in upon about 70,000 persons, who were driven off, like a herd of cattle, to Seringapatam, and "honoured with the distinction of Islam,"t on the very day selected by their persecutor to assume sovereign, or rather imperial sway, by taking the proud title of Padsha, and causing his own name to be prayed for in public in place of that of the Mogul Shah Alum, as was still customary in the mosques all over

* Wilks' History of Mysoor, ii., 530. † Mohammed Toghlak. See page 75.

The Guntoor Circar, to which the English had become entitled upon the death of Bassalut Jung, in 1782, by virtue of the great detestation for the immorality of the Coorgs, who, he truly affirmed, systematically pursued a most † Tippoo, in his celebrated production, the Sul-taun-u-Towareckh, or King of Histories, expresses expresses expresses treaty of 1768, was obtained from Nizam | Ali in 1788. The eession was expedited by a recent quarrel between him and Tippoo Sultan, which rendered the renewal of the treaty of 1768 peculiarly desirable to the former, inasmuch as it contained a proviso that, in the event of his requiring assistance, a British contingent of infantry and artillery should march to support him against any power not in alliance with the E. I. Cy.; the exceptions being the Mahrattas, the nabobs of Arcot aud Oude, and the rajahs of Tanjore and Travancore. The Nizam would fain have interpreted the revived agreement as warranting a united attack on Mysoor; but his schemes were positively rejected by Lord Cornwallis, on account of the recent engagement entered into with that state, which was still professedly at peace with the English. Yet it was evident to every power in India, that the sultan only waited a favourable opportunity to renew hostilities. The insulting earicatures of many of the company's servants, held up to mockery and coarse jesting on the walls of the houses of Seringapatam, might have been an idle effusion of popular feeling; but the wretched eaptives still pining in loathsome dungeons, in violation of the promised general release of prisoners, and the enrolment of a number of English children as domestic slaves to the faithless tyrant, afforded, in conjunction with various raneorous expressions, unmistakeable indications of his deadly hatred towards the whole nation.* inroad of the Mysooreans on the territory of the rajah of Travaneore, brought matters The rajah, when menaced by to an issue. invasion from his formidable neighbour, appealed to the E. I. Cy. for their promised protection, and an express communication was made to Tippoo, that an attack on the lines of defence formed on the Travancore frontier, would be regarded as a declaration | of war with the English. The lines referred to, constructed in 1775, consisted of a broad aud deep ditch, a strong bamboo hedge, a slight parapet, and a good rampart, with bastions on rising grounds, almost flanking one another. thirty miles (from the island of Vaipeen to the Anamalaiah range), but were more imposing than effectual, as it was hardly possible to defend so great an extent. Tippoo approached this barrier in December, 1789,

* Col. Fullarton, writing in 1784, accuses Tippoo of having caused 200 English to be forcibly circumcised and enrolled in his service.—(View, 207.)

and proceeded to erect batteries. An unsuspected passage round the right flank of the lines, enabled him to introduce a body of troops within the wall, and he led them onward, hoping to force open the nearest gate, and admit the rest of the army. attempt proved, not merely unsuccessful. but fatal to the majority of the assailants. They were compelled to retreat in confusion, and, in the general scramble across the ditch, Tippoo himself was so severely bruised, as to limp occasionally during the remainder of his life. His palanquiu fell into the hands of the enemy, the bearers having been trodden to death by their comrades; and his seals, rings, and personal ornaments remained to attest his presence, and contradiet his reiterated denial of having borne any part in a humiliating catastrophe, which had materially deranged his plans. More than this, alarm at the probable consequence of a repulse, induced Tippoo to write, in terms of fulsome flattery, to the English authorities, assuring them that the late aggression was the unauthorised act of his troops. Lord Cornwallis treated these assertions with merited contempt, and hastened to secure the co-operation of the Nizam and the Mahratta ministers of Poona, to which he would gladly have added that of Sindia, had not the price demanded been the aid of British troops for aggressive warfare in Rajpootana, which was unhesitatingly refused. He proceeded to make vigorous preparations for a campaign, by assembling troops, collecting supplies, and meeting financial difficulties in an open and manly spirit. Further outlay for a European investment he completely stopped, as a ruinous drain on resources already insufficient to meet the heavy expenditure which must inevitably be incurred in the ensuing contest, the avowed object of which was to diminish materially the power of the sultan; for, as Lord Cornwallis truly declared, in a despatch to General Medows, if this despot were "suffered to retain his present importance, and to insult and bully all his neighbours, until the French should They extended a distance of again be in a condition to support him, it would almost certainly leave the seeds of a future dangerous war." Meanwhile, Tippoo confirmed these convictions, and justified the intended procedure by a renewed attempt upon Travaneore, and succeeded in razing the defences and spreading desolation over the country. The invasion of Mysoor compelled him to return for its defence; and the system of intelligence established by his father, together with his own activity, enabled him to take advantage of the separation of the English army into three divisions, to attack them in detail, break through their chain of communication, and transfer hostilities to the Caruntic. These reverses were partially compensated by the success of a fourth detachment from Bombay in obtaining possession of the whole of Malabar. The second campaign was opened in February, 1791, hy Cornwallis in person. Placing himself at the head of the army, he entered Mysoor by the pass of Mooglee, and in the commencement of March, laid siege to the fortress of Bangalore. Though the troops had been little harassed by hostile operations, they were much enfechled by the fatigues and privations of a tedious march; the cattle were worn to skeletons, and their supplies, both of food and ammunition, nearly exhausted. The arrival of a Mahratta reinforcement had been long and vainly expected; and affairs were in a most critical state, when the successful assault, first of the town, and subsequently of the citadel of Bangalore (carried by a bayonet charge), relieved the mind of the commander-inchief from the gloomy prospect involved in the too probable event of defeat. Nevertheless, difficulties and dangers of no ordinary character remained to be combated. At the close of March the army moved from Bangalore northward, for the purpose of forming a junction with the auxiliary corps of cavalry expected from the Nizam. When, after being repeatedly misled by false information regarding the vicinity of the Hyderabad troops, the desired union was at length successfully effected, it proved a fresh source of trouble and disappointment; for the 10,000 light troops so anxiously awaited, instead of rendering good service in the field, were so ill-disciplined and un-

fore did but augment the distress and anxiety they were sent to lessen.* Though surrounded on every side by trustworthy, as to be incapable of conducting even a foraging expedition, and thereto solicitations addressed by some female members of the family of Nizam Ali when in peril at Adoni.

† Twenty English youths, the survivors of the unhappy band whom Tippoo, with malicious wantonness, campaign. - (Mill's India, v., 396.)

circumstances of the most depressing character, Cornwallis, with undaunted courage, made such preparations as the possession of Bangalore placed in his power for the siege of Scringapatam. An enruest desire to hring to a speedy close hostilities, the prolongation of which involved a grievous sacrifice of life and treasure, added to the alarming information constantly arriving in India regarding the progress of the French revolution, induced him to advance at once upon the capital of Mysoor, despite the defective character of his resources. The troops marched, in May, to Arikera, about nine miles distant from Seringapatam, through a country which, in anticipation of their approach, had been reduced to the condition of a desert. Tippoo Sultan took up a strong position in their front, from whence he was driven by Lord Cornwallisforced to action, defeated, and compelled to retreat and take refuge under the works of his capital, for the safety of which he now became seriously alarmed. Recognising too late the folly of wantonly provoking the vengeance of a powerful foe, he gave orders that the caricatures of the English should be earefully obliterated from all public places; at the same time taking the savage precaution of slaughtering, without distinction, such prisoners as he had privately detained, lest they should live to afford incontrovertible evidence of his breach of faith and diabolical crucky.+

Lord Cornwallis was, however, quite unable to pursue his recent success. The deplorable condition of the army, in which smallpox was now raging, with diseases immediately resulting from insufficient food and excessive fatigue under incessant rains, compelled him to issue a reluctant order for retreat. It seemed madness to remain under such circumstances in such a position, still more to hazard further advance, on the chance of the long-delayed succour expected from the Mahrattas; and after destroying the battering train and other heavy equipments, which the loss of eattlet prevented them from carrying away, the English, in deep disappointment and depression, com-

by intrigues carried on between the mother of Tippoo and the favourite wife of the Nizam. The former lady successfully deprecated the wrath excited by the gross insults lately offered by here are interested by the gross insults lately offered by here are interested. tims, including native state prisoners. A few Englishmen contrived to effect their escape, and one of them wrote an account of the treatment received.

See Captivity of James Scurry; London, 1824.)

1 Nearly 10,000 bullocks perished in this disastrous

menced their homeward march. were Chispatched to General Abereromby up by the occupation of Oossoor, Rayacot-(governor of Bomhay), who was advancing tah, and other forts, whereby communicafrom the westword, to return to Malabar; and Lord Cornwallis, having completed these mortifying arrangements, was about six miles en route to Bangalore, when a party of horse l unexpectedly rode in upon the linggage flank. They were token for enemies, but proved to be forerunners of the despaired-of Mahratta force, under Hurri Punt and Purteram Blow. In answer to the eager interrogatories poured in upon them on all ·ides, they replied that numerous messengers had been regularly sent, at different times, with accounts of their approach; every one of whom had been cut off by the undeeping vigilance of the light troops of the enemy. Their tardy arrival was in some measure accounted for by the time spent by them in co-operation with a detachment from Bomhay under Captain Little, in the siege of Darwar, one of the great barriers of Tippoo's northern frontier. The place held out against the muskilful and dilatory operations of the assailants for twenty-nine weeks, when the arrival of news of the capture of Baugalore induced its surrender, which was followed by the easy conquest of all the l possessions of the gultan north of the Toombuildes.

The Mahrattas now declared themselves mable to keep the field, unless the English could give them pecuniary support; and Lord Cornwallis, unable to dispense with their aid, was compelled to advance them a loan of twelve lacs of rupees, to obtain which he took the bold measure of ordering the Madras authorities to coin the bullion sent out for the China trade into rupees, and forward it without delay. The ample supplies of draught eattle and provisions, together with the immunerable miscellaneous contents of the bazant of a Mahratta army,* afforded a most welcome relief to men half-famished and wretchedly equipped. Still the advanced season, and the return of General Abercromby, compelled the continuance of the

The Mahratias commenced by asking exorbitant prices for their goods; but when compelled by the diminished purses of the purchasers to reduce their demands or stop the sale, they took the former alternative; but still continued to realise immense profits, since their whole stock-in-trade had been accumulated by plunder. Their bazaar is described by Col. Wilks as comprising every imaginable article, from a web of English broadcloth to a Birmingham penknife; from the shawls of Cashmere to the secondhand garment of a Hindoo; from diamonds of the first water to the silver earring of a poor

Orders retreat to Hangalore; which was followed tion between the presidency and the Carnatic. through the Policade Pass, was laid open. By this route a convoy reached the camp from Madras, comprising 100 elephants laden with treasure, marching two abreast; 6,000 bullocks with rice; 100 earts with arrack; and *everal hundred coolies with other supplies.

The war was viewed by the Ilritish parliament as the inevitable consequence of the cruelty and aggression of Tippoo. The energetic measures of Lord Cornwallis were warmly applauded, and reinforcements of troops, with specie to the amount of .0500,000, sent to assist his operations. Comprehensive arrangements were made for provisioning the troops, by taking advantage of the extensive resources and experience of the Brinjarries,+ or travelling corn-merchants, who form a distinct easte, and enjoy, even among the least civilised native states, an immunity for life and property, based on the great services rendered by these neutral trailers to all parties indiscriminately, from a very remote period. Measures were likewise adopted for the introduction of a more efficient system of intelligence. The general campaign which opened under these auspicious circumstances, was attended with complete success. The intermediate operations were marked by the capture of the hill-forts of Numlyilroog, Savendroog, and Ootradroog. All three were situated on lofty granite rocks, and deemed well-nigh inaccessible—especially Savendroog (the rock of death); and so implicit was the confidence placed by Tippoo in the strength of its natural and artificial defences, that he received with joy the tidings of the assault, making sure that the malaria for which the neighbouring jungle had acquired a fearful celebrity, would fight against the English, and slav one-half, leaving the other to fall by the sword. But the very character of the place diminished the watchfulness of its garrison, and tempted them to witness with plundered village maiden; from oxen, sheep, and thoustry, to the dried salt-fish of the Concan. The poultry, to the dried salt-fish of the Concan. tables of the moneychangers, overspread with the coins of every country of the east, were not wanting

in this motley assemblage; and among the various trades carried on with remarkable activity, was that of a tanner, so that the English officers were enabled to obtain, by means of ambulatory tan-pits, what their own Indian capitals could not then produce, except as European imports—excellent sword-belts.—(Mysoor, iii., 158-'9.)

† A Persian compound, designating their office.

contemptuous indifference the early ap- feelily conducted; but the irrepressible tenproaches of the besiegers, who, after a series of Herculcan labours (in which the utmost exertions of human strength and skill, were nided in an extraordinary manner by the force and sagacity of some admirablytrained elephants), at length succeeded in effecting a practicable breach in what formed the lower wall of the rock, although it rose 1,500 feet from a base of above eight miles in circumference. Lord Cornwallis and General Medows stood watching with intense auxiciy the progress of the assault, which commenced an hour before noon on the 21st December, 1791. The band of the 52nd regiment played "Britons, strike home;" and the troops mounted with a steady gallantry which completely unnerved the native forces assembled to defend the breach. A hand-to-hand encounter with men who had already overcome such tremendous obstacles, was sufficient to alarm the servants of a more popular master than Tippoo, and they fled in disorder, tumbling over one another in their eager ascent of the steep and narrow path which led to the The pursuers followed with all citadel. speed; but the majority of the fugitives had effected their entrance, when a sergeant of the 71st regiment shot, at a distance, the soldier who was closing the first gate. All the other barriers the English passed together the precipitons rocks, in endeavouring to the commander-in-chief had contemplated as the most doubtful operation of the war, was effected in twelve days from the first arrival of the troops. The casualties were not numerous, and the actual assault only lasted an hour, and involved the loss of no single life on the side of the besiegers. was well-timed; for even so much as half-auto the scene of nction the Mysoorean detachment, then fast approaching to aid like a private soldier. their comrades.

* In detaining the garrisan clase prisaners, notwithstanding a provisa for their liberation. Bad ciate the value of truth even as a convenience. Among his letters, translated by Col. Kirkpatrick, is an a Mahratta fortress to promise anything until he gat possession, and then ta put every living thing-man, waman, child, dag, and cat—ta the sward, except the chief, who was to be reserved for tarture. | break.

dency of the Mahrattas for freebooting on their own account, led them again to derange the plans of Lord Cornwallis, by neglecting to support General Abereromby, and their misconduct facilitated the conquest of the fort of Coimbatore by the Mysooreaus. The flagrant violation of the terms of surrender* (a besetting sin on the part of Tippoo), afforded a reason for rejecting his overtures for peace; and on the 1st of Febrnary, 1792, Lord Cornwallis, in conjunction with the Hyderahad and Poona armies, advanced to the attack of Scringapatam, under the walls of which the sultan, with his whole force, lay encamped. Aware of his inability to compete in the field with the formidable confederacy by which he was opposed, Tippoo hoped to be able to hold ont against their combined efforts in his island-capital, by keeping them at bay until the want of supplies, in an already exhausted country-or, in any ease, the recurrence of the monsoon-should compel their retreat. The dilatory and unskilful tactics of the native troops would probably have contributed to realise these auticipations; but the English commander-in-chief correctly appreciated the danger of delay, and chose to incur the charge of rashness by attempting to surprise the tiger in his den, rather than waste strength and resources with the enemy, of whom about 100 were in the dispiriting operations of a tedious and slain, while many others perished among precarious blockade. It was deemed inadvisable to await the arrival of expected escape. This important enterprise, which reinforcements from Bombay, or even to divulge the plan of attack to the allies, who, on the night of the 6th, were astounded by the news that a handful of infantry, unsupported by cannon or cavalry, were on the march to attack the dense host of Tippoo. in a fortified camp under the walls of It his capital; and that Lord Cornwallis, in person, commanded the division destined to hour's delay would have sufficed to bring penetrate the centre of the hostile force; having gone to fight, as they expressed it,1 The sultan had just finished his evening's repast when the The counter-hostilities of Tippoo were alarm was given. Ite mounted, and beheld † Seringapatam is situated on an island farmed by two branches of the Cauvery, which after separating white the materious characteristic of Tippon, to a distance of a mile and a half, again unites about who, says Col. Wilks, cauld not be made in appreciate the value of truth even as a convenience. hedge" of bamban and other strong shrubs surraunded the capital, and Tippoa's encampment ocand in which he desires the commander of an attack | cupied an enclosure between this hedge and the river.

There were two ather calumns, cammanded by General Medows and Calonel Maxwell. § The Indians usually attack at midnight ar day-passing rapidly through his camp, driving before them a cloud of fugitives, and making directly for the main ford of the stream which lay between them and the capital. This movement threatened to cut off the retreat of Tippoo, who perceiving his danger, hastened across the ford in time to clude the grasp of his pursuers and take up a position on a commanding summit of the fort, from whence he continued to issue orders till the morning. His troops had already deserted by thousands. One band, 10,000 strong (the Ahmedy Chelahs, composed of the wretelied Coorgs), wholly disappeared and escaped to their native woods, accompanied by their wives and children; and many of the Assud Oollahees (a similar description of corps) followed their example. A number of Europeans, forcibly detained in the service of Tippoo Sultan, likewise fled to the protection of the English, including an old Frenchman, named Blévette, who had chiefly constructed the six redoubts which offered the most formidable obstacles to the assailants. Two of these were captured and retained by English detachments, at the cost of much hard fight-The night of the 7th afforded an interval of rest to both parties, and time to ascertain the extent of their respective losses. That of the British was stated at 535 men, including killed, wounded, and missing; that of the enemy at 23,000, of whom 4,000 had fallen in the actual contest. On the following morning operations were commeneed against the strong triangular-shaped, water-washed fort, in which the sultan had His gorgeously furnished taken refuge. garden-palace was turned into an hospital for the wounded English, and the magnificent cypress groves, and other valuable trees, cut down to afford materials for the siege. General Abercromby arrived in safety with the Bomhay army, having perfected a line of Malabar and Coorg, the province of Dindecommunication with the Malabar coast; the gul (a valuable accession to their southern Brinjarries maintained such abundance in [territory], together with Baramahl and the the camp of Cornwallis as had not been known since the commencement of the war; and the soldiers, stimulated by the hope of speedily liberating, with their own hands, the survivors of their murdered countrymen, worked with unflagging energy at the breaching batteries. Tippoo, seriously alarmed, made overtures for peace, and after much delay, oceasioned by his treacherous and unstable policy, and his unceasing efforts to gain time, was at length compelled to sign a and could with difficulty be restrained from

by the light of the moon an extended column | preliminary treaty, the terms of which involved the cession of half his territories to the allies, and the payment of about three million and a-half sterling. Two of his sons, boys of eight and ten years of age, were delivered up to Lord Cornwallis, as hostages for the confirmation and fulfilment of the agreement; but despite this guarantee, Tippoo showed evident signs of an inclination to renew hostilities, on finding that the English insisted on his relinquishment of Coorg, the rajah of which principality he had hoped to seize and exhibit as a terrible instance of vengeance. Lord Cornwallis, who appears to have acted throughout the war with equal energy and moderation. endeavoured to conciliate him by the surrender of Bangalore-a fortress and distriet which, in a military point of view, far surpassed Coorg in value; but on the latter point he took decided ground, justly deeming it a clear duty to reward the good service rendered by the rajah, by preserving him from the elutches of his relentless foe. Preparations for a renewed siege at length brought matters to an issue. The previous arrangements were formally confirmed by Tippoo on the 19th of March, and the treaty delivered to Lord Cornwallis and the allies by the royal hostages.

The total territorial revenue of the sultan, according to the admitted schedule, averaged from about two-and-a-half to three million sterling, one-half of which was now made over to the allies, to be divided by them in equal portions, according to the original terms of the confederation. By the addition now made to their possessions, the boundary of the Mahrattas was again extended to the river Toombuddra. allotment of the Nizam reached from the Kistna beyond the Pennar, and included the forts of Gunjecotah and Cuddapah, and the province of Kurpa. The British obtained Lower Ghauts, which formed an iron boundary for Coromandel. The Anglo-Indian army were ill-pleased with this termination of the war. They had set their hearts on nothing less than the storming of Seringapatam; and when, in consequence of Tippoo's overtures for peace, orders were given to desist from further operations, they became, says an officer who was present, "dejected to a degree not to be described, continuing their work." Their dissatisfaction was increased by the miserable artifice of Tippoo, who, desirous of assuming before his own troops a defiant attitude, although really a suitor for peace, gave secret orders to fire on the English soldiery, both with cannon and musketry. Under such circumstances, it needed all the weight of the public and private character of Lord Cornwallis, to enforce the admirable precept with which the general orders to the victorious troops concluded,-"that moderation in success is no less expected from brave men than gallantry in action." In acknowledgment of their excellent conduct, a donation, equal to assume, as vicegerent of the Mogul empire. twelve months' batta, was awarded them, out of the money exacted from the sultan. The disinterestedness of the commander-in-chief and of General Medows was displayed in their refusal to accept any portion of this sum, or of the prize-money. Their cordial co-operation and perfect confidence in each other's zeal and integrity, had been conspicuous throughout the war, forming a pleasing contrast to the divided counsels and personal quarrels which had, of late years, diminished the efficiency of the military and civil services of the officers of the company. This unanimity enabled Lord Corn- Gholam Karin King the sen of Zabim wallis to take full advantage of the influence Khan, the Bottle to get possession the possessed over the Nizam and the Mah- Delhi = 1788. This is a communication Their mutual distrust, combined through the members of the tart of the rattas.

must have provoked immediate hostilities with Mahadajee Sindia, since it was to oppose his large and formidable corps of regular artillery (under De Boigne* and other European officers), that the services of an English detachment were especially desired. Such a procedure would have been inconsistent with the pacific policy by which it was both the duty and inclination of Lord Cornwallis to abide; and Sindia was therefore suffered to retain, without interference on the part of the only enemy he feared, the dominant position which the time-serving policy of Hastings had first helped him to His power, before reaching its present height, had received a severe check, from the efforts of other ambitious chiefs to obtain possession of the person, and wield anthority in the name, of the hapless Shah Alum,† who, from the time of the death of his brave general, Nujeef Khan, in 1782, had been tossed about, like a child's toy, from one usurper to another-s tool during their prosperity, a scape-gos: in adversity. Sindis became paramount in 1785; but having engaged in war with Periab Sing of Jerpoor, advanings was mken of his absence by perform the most humiliating offices; and | declaration of war. The charter of the the fury of a wild beast, flung the venerable | financial difficulties of Mohammed Ali. monarch to the ground, buck on his breast, and, with his dagger, pierced his eve-halls f through and through. Sindia terminated these horrible sernes. Gholam Kadir took to flight, but was captured by the Mahratta chief, who cut off tors reduced from the twelve laes of pagodas his mose, cars, hands, and feet, and sent | (conceded to them most improperly by the him in an iron cage to Shah Alum-a fearful example of retributive harbarity. perished on the road, and his accomplice, the treacherous narir, was trodden to death the profligate Asuf-ad-Dowlah to adopt by an elephant. The condition of the imperial family, though mucliorated, remained barely tolerable during the supremacy of Sindia; for the stated allowance for the support of the emperor and his thirty children, though liberal in its nominal amount, was to irregularly paid, that the royal household often wanted the necessaries of

The arrogance of Mahadajee increased with his power; and not only the Nizam and the Poona ministry headed by Nana Furnavees, but even the English, began to contemplate an approaching struggle as inevitable; when their apprehensions were unexpectedly removed by his death, of fever, in February, 1791, aged sixty-seven. He left no male issue, but hequeathed his extensive territorial possessions to his greatnephew and adopted son, Dowlnt Rao, then ties against the Nizam were carried on by his a youth of fifteen.

The administration of Lord Cornwallis ended in the preceding year; its concluding feature being the capture, once again, of Pondicherry and all the French settlements in India, in consequence of the national yearly stipend of four lass (promised, but not paid, by the vizier of Oude), which, after the death of the prince, was continued to his family by the E. I. Cy.

What n blow would have been inflicted on the pride and bigotry of Aurungzebe, could it have been forefold that one of his dynasty would be compelled, by a Mahratta, to sign a decree forbidding the slaughter of kine throughout the Mogul dominions. Yet this was enforced by Sindia on Shah Alum.

In the year ending April, 1793, the receipts of the company in India amounted to £8,225,628; the total expenses to £7,001,000: tearing in surprise for the representative of the Puar and other minutential £1,218,678 clear gain. In the outgoings, were influential families, took the field; while the Guicowars from families, took the field; while the Guicowars from families, took the field; while the Guicowars from Guzeral, and others, sent detachments to join the gendered to £7,971,665), and money suptotal expenses to £7,007,050: leaving n surplus of plied to Beneoolen and other distant settlements; making a drawback of £702,443. The debts in England, exclusive of the capital stock, were The debts in England, exclusive of the capital stock, were Madhoo Rao II., who was himself completely con-£10,983,518. The capital stock had been increased trolled by Nana Furnavees.—(Duff, iii., 111.)

when Shah Alom indignantly remonstrated E. I. Cy. was at the same time (1793) against the atrocities he was compelled to renewed for a term of twenty years.† Arwitness, the Robilla sprang upon him with rangements were made for the relief of the The management of the revenues of the Carnatic, which had been temporarily as-The return of sumed by Lord Cornwallis during the war, was partially restored to the nabob at its conclusion, and the payments to his credi-Board of Control in 1785), to somewhat He | more than six lacs. Attempts were likewise made, but with little success, to induce reformatory measures, to stay the ruin which remed about to overwhelm the fair province, or rather kingdom, of Oude.

Administration of Sir John Shore .-This gentleman (afterwards Lord Teignmonth) had been many years in the service of the company, and was selected for the high post of governor-general, t expressly on account of the ability and perseverance which he had brought to bear on the intricate and little understood question of Indian revenue. His pacific disposition was likewise viewed as affording a guarantee for the fulfilment of the strict injunctions of the British parliament-to sluin every description of aggressive warfare on behalf of the company, whether in the character of a principal or an ally. Upon the death of Mahadajee Sindia, preparations for hostiliyoung successor, Dowlut Rao Siudia, with the co-operation of the Poona authorities and all the leading Mahratta chieftains.§ The attempts of Sir John Shore at friendly mediation were treated with insulting indifference by the Mahrattas, so soon as they in 1789, from four to five million, on which sum a dividend of ten-and-a-half per ceal was now paid.

† General Medows had been offered the position on the expected resignation of Lord Cornwallis; hut he declined it, declaring his intention of staying in India just long enough "to lead the storming party at Seringapalam, or until the war is over;" and no longer. He adds, that he had saved £40,000 out of the liberal appointments of the company, and should feel amply compensated if they pronounced "the la-hourer worthy of his hire."—(Auber's India, ii., 121.) § Tookajee Holear and the rajah of Berar, with eral assembly of Mahrattas, gathered together for the last time under the nominal authority of the peishwa, perceived his determination of preserving a strict neutrality. The Nizam advanced to Beder, where the enemy hastened to give him battle. After an indecisive action, he retreated by night to Kurdla, a small fort surrounded by hills. He was besieged, closely blockaded, and compelled to purchase peace by the most ignominious concompletely erippled his resources, and left him at the merey of his old foe, Nana Furnavees. But at this crisis the "Mahratta Maehiavelli" overreached himself. The severity and exeess of his preeautionary measures wrought upon the high spirit of the young peishwa (then one-and-twenty years of age) with unexpected violence, and profligate Asuf-ad-Dowlah. and, in a moment of deep depression, eaused by the indignity to which he was aged seventy-eight, and was succeeded by subjected, he flung himself from a terrace of the palace, and expired in the course of two days, after expressing a strong desire that his cousin, Bajee Rao, should succeed to the authority of which he had been defrauded.* This arrangement would have been generally popular; for Bajee Rao, then about twenty years of age, bore a high eharaeter for skill in manly and military exereises, and was besides deeply read in ancient Brahminical lore, and a studious follower of the intrieate observances of easte. Beneath this fair surface lay, as Nana Furnavees truly declared, the weakness of his father Anundee Bye, as yet undeveloped.

The talents of Bajee Rao, even had they been likely to be used for good instead of for evil, would probably have been equally opposed to the views of the minister, who wanted a mere puppet to occupy the musnud on public oceasions, and then return to his gilded prison. With this intent he caused the widow of the late Madhoo Rao II. (herself a mere child) to adopt an infant, whom he proclaimed peishwa. Sindia espoused the cause of Bajee Rao, and the dissensions which followed enabled Nizam Ali to procure a release from three-fourths of the cessions and payments stipulated for by the treaty of Kurdla.

The remaining events during the administration of Sir John Shore may be briefly

* Bajee Rao had endeavoured to open a secret intercourse with Madhoo Rao, which being discovered by Nana Furnavees, drew severe reproaches and more strict surveillance on both cousins .- (Duff.)

† In this year the Calcutta bench, and orientalists in general, sustained a heavy loss in the death of the unright judgo and distinguished scholar, Sir William of Asuf-ad-Dowlah were all supposititious.

noted. Fyzoolla Khan, the Rohilla ruler of Rampore and its dependent districts, died in 1794.† His eldest son, Mohammed Ali, succeeded to the government, but was seized and murdered by his younger brother, Gholam Mohammed Khan, who was in turn deposed by the eonjoined troops of the English and the vizier. A jaghire of ten cessions, which, if carried out, would have laes of revenue was conferred on Ahmed Ali, the youthful son of the murdered ruler: provision was made for the maintenance of Gholam Mohammed, who came to reside at Benares, under the protection of the British government; and the treasures and remaining territory of the late Fyzoolla Khan, were delivered up to the wasteful

Mohammed Ali, of Arcot, died in 1795, his eldest son, Omdut-al-Omrah. In the same year the English effected the com-In the plete reduction of the Dutch settlements in Ceylon, Malaeea, Banda, Amboyna, Coehin, and the Cape of Good Hope. ‡ Asufad-Dowlah died in 1797. A dispute coneerning the succession arose between his brother Sadut Ali, and his alleged son Vizier Ali, a youth of seventeen, said to be of spurious descent. Sir John Shore eventually decided in favour of the former, with whom he entered into a new treaty, by which the fort of Allahabad was made over to the English, the annual subsidy increased Ragoba, and the wiekedness of his mother to seventy-six laes of rupees, twelve laes guaranteed by the vizier as compensation money for the expenses incurred in the recent interference, and an annual pension of a lac and a-half of rupees settled on Vizier Ali, beside other arrangements regarding the support of the company's troops, deemed necessary for the defence of Oude.

In the beginning of 1798, the governorgeneral, who had been raised to the peerage with the title of Lord Teignmouth, resigned his position on account of ill-health, and returned to England. Despite his high character as a financier, the pecuniary results of his four years' sway were disastrous, and the scourge of war was but temporarily delayed. Tippoo evidently waited an opportunity to renew hostilities; and the expensive preparations made to invade Mysoor, in Jones, aged forty-eight. He was the first president of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Warren Hastings the patron, and Charles Wilkins a member.

These conquests were mainly effected through the zeal of Lord Hohart, governor of Madras.

the event of his taking part with the Datch, in 1793." In this position be continued together with the requirements of the presidencies of Mailras and Bombay, obliged the supreme government, in 1796, to open the treasury for a loan hearing twelve per cent. interest. In the following year, increasing involvements compelled a considerable reduction in the investments-a step never taken, it will be recollected, except under the stern pressure of necessity.

Administration of Lond Monnington (Manquis Wellerelly.) - An impending war with Mysoor, intricate political relations havel on the temporary interest of other native powers, an exhausted treasury, and an increasing delt,-such were the difficulties that awaited the successor of Lord Trigamouth. After some delay, the choice—happily for England and for Indiafell upon a nobleman no less distinguished for the assertion, that his lordship had for decision of purpose than for deliberation and forethought in counsel, gifted with a mind alike capable of grasping the grandest [India, when all his attention was attracted plans, and of entering into the minute details so important to good government. Lord Mornington was but seven-and-thirty when he was selected for the ardnons office attests the extraordinary amount of inforof exercising almost irresponsible authority over British India; but he lead been early called to play an important part in public life, and lind, from circumstances, been led to regard Indian affairs with peculiar interest, even before his appointment as one of the six commissioners of the Board of Control,

The Earl of Mornington (afterwards Marquis Wellesley) was descended from an ancient family, whose founders went over to Ireland with Strongbow, and held (on the tenure of hearing the royal standard "quando opus fuerit") the eastle and manor of Dangan, in the county Meath, where the future governor-general of India was born in 1760. The name of his father fills an honoured place in the musical annals of England, as the composer of some of the firest chants and glees in the language: his mother, the Countess of Mornington, was highly gifted both in person and in intellect, and especially remarkable for force of character, which she retained unimpaired even to advanced age, and transmitted to at least three of her sons—the subject of this notice, "the Iron Duke," and Baron Cowley. The death of Lord Murnington, in 1781, arrested the college studies of his young successor, and called him when scarcely of age, to relinquish the classic pursuits by which he might else have become too exclusively engrossed, for the severer duties of publie life. Close intimacy with the Cornwallis family, doubtless contributed to direct his attention to Indian affairs; and the influence of the Eton holidays regularly passed with Archbishop Cornwallis at Lam-lieth Palace, from 1771 to 1779, had probably its effect in producing, or at least strengthening the love of justice and high sense of honour for which the young lord became distinguished, as well as in im-

for the ensuing five years, attending sedulously to its duties, and availing himself to the utmost of the opportunities it afforded of becoming intimately acquainted with the condition of the E. L. Cy., the mode of government adopted in the three presidencies, and the position and lastory of neighbouring powers. The subject was, to the highest degree, attractive to a statesman who considered that "the majesty of Great Britain was her trade, and the throne of the commerce of the world the fittest object of her ambition." The able and indefatigable, but prejudiced historian of India, was probably but imperfectly acquainted with the character and antecedents of Lord Mornington, when he remarked that he came out as a war-governor: still less ground existed "possessed but little time for acquainting himself with the complicated affairs of to a particular point."+ The remarkable letter, addressed to Lord Melville from the Cape of Good Hope, in 1798, tabundantly mation already accumulated by the writer, as well as the profound and far-sighted views which he had been enabled to form therefrom. The mental qualifications of Lord Mornington were rendered generally attractive by the dignified and courteous bearing, and the sweet, yet powerful utterance planting the deep and clear views of religion which formed the solate of his honoured age. His first care was the voluntary liquidation of his father's debts; the next, a most liberal provision for the education of his brothers and sisters, especially for that of Arthur, whose capacities he early appreciated. A brilliant career in the Irish House of Parliament, was speedily followed and surpassed by his success as an orator in the British House of Commons, where, strangely enough, his first speech was in reprobation of the conduct of Lord North in making Warren Hastings governor-general of India, nfter his unprincipled conduct regarding the Robillas. The opinions delivered by him on the questions of war with the French republic, the disputes regarding the regency, the abolition of the Irish parliament, and Catholic emancipation, have their page in history; but none occupy a higher place in the memory of those who cherish the name of the Marquis Wellesley, than his unwavering and indignant denunciation of the slave-trade, which he declared to be an "abominable, infamous, and bloody traffic," the continuance of which it was a disgrace to Great Britain to sanction, even for an hour. (Vide Debate on motion of Mr. Dundas for gradual abolition, April, 1792.) + Mill's India; edited by Prof. Wilson, vi., 73.

which enhanced the effect of his rare eloquence. His small but perfectly symmetrical figure, formed a worthy model for the chisels of Bacon and Chantry; while the easel of Lawrence rendered the delicate but clearly defined outline of the nose and mouth, the soft, gazelle-like* eyes and dark arched brows, in contrast with the silver locks which clustered round his lofty forcheadscarcely less publicly known, in his own time, than the remarkable profile and eagleeye of his younger brother are at present.

On his arrival in Madras, in April, 1798, Lord Mornington was accompanied by his younger brother Henry, afterwards Lord Cowley, in the capacity of private secretary. The future duke, then Lt.-Col. Wellesley, with his regiment (the 33rd), had been already some months in India. After a brief stay at Madras (of which presidency Lord Clive, the son of the hero of Arcot, was appointed governor), Lord Mornington proceeded to Calcutta, and commenced a series of civil reforms; but his attention was speedily arrested by the intrigues of Tippoo and some French adventurers, who, though in themselves of small importance, might, he well knew, at any moment give ble effect in tending to stay the moral and place to, or acquire the rank of powerfully supported representatives of their nation. In fact, schemes to that effect were in process of development; though the success of but when misused, detestable drug, onium. the British by sea and land, the victories of Nelson on the Nile, and that of Acre by Sir | Sidney Smith, in conjunction with Lord Mornington's own measures, eventually prevented Buonaparte from putting into execution his cherished plan of wresting from England her growing Indian empire. The republican general and his great adversaries, the brothers Wellesley, had a long series of diplomatic hostilities to wage in distant bemispheres, before the last fierce struggle which convulsed the European continent ments regarding the hostile operations in with the death-throes of the usurped authority of the citizen emperorl Their ! battle-fields and council-chambers, as yet, lay wide apart; but the letters of Buonaparte to Tippoo Sultan and to Zemaun Shah, the successor of the fierce Doorani conqueror of Paniput, who had threatened to renew the incursions of his grandsire in Hindoostan, served to convey an impression to the native princes that a European power did exist, engerly waiting its opportunity to fight the English with their own weapons. strongly impressed was Tippoo with this conviction, that he sent ambassadors to the French governor of the Mauritius (M. Malartic), with proposals for an offensive and defensive alliance against their mutual rival, offering to bear the whole expenses of the French auxiliary force to be sent to his assistance, and to furnish them with every acenstomed allowance except wine and spirits, with which he declared himself entirely un-The truth was, that Tippoo, in landable conformity with the ordinance of his standard of action, the Koran, forbade his subjects to use any description of intoxicating plants or heverages; and, as far as possible, caused the white poppy and the hemp-plant to be destroyed even in private gardens. Those only who, like Colonel Tod and other travelled historians, have had the opportunity of scarching out for themselves authentic records illustrative of the condition of the people of India at different epochs, can fully appreciate the political importance of this measure, and its probaphysical degradation which the abuse of all intoxicating compounds never fails to produce, especially of that valuable medicine,

The offer of the sultan was warmly welcomed by the French governor, and a small detachment of volunteers sent to Malabar, and received as an earnest of further assist-Lord Mornington addressed repeated remonstrances to Tippoo respecting this notorious breach of faith; and received, in return, the same empty professions of good-will which had been previously made to Lord Cornwallis. There was but one course to be taken with a man who met all arguwhich he was engaged by positive denial or wilful silence; and the governor-general, despite the exhausted treasury and financial involvements which even a peace-governor had been unable to avoid, now found himself compelled to prepare for the renewal of He proceeded to Madras, where, by infusing his own spirit into this heretofore venal and incapable presidency, he procured

This expression may savour of exaggeration or affectation to persons unacquainted with Lord Wellesley. Those who have watched him while speaking on subjects which touched his feelings, will, on the contrary, consider the comparison a poor compliment the refuse of the rabble of the illustration (Desputation to eyes gifted with the power of reflecting every varying phase of thought and feeling, but ever tender and gazelle-like in repose.

equipment of the armies on the coasts of Coromandel and Malabar. The conduct of Rao, with whom Nana had become partially Nizam Ali, the subahdar of the Decean, reconciled; and through his influence, a afforded much ground for uneasiness. refusal of Sir John Shore to suffer the English subsidiary detachment to fight against apparently with the most treacherous intent. the Mahrattas, had induced him to raise a large corps, trained and officered by Lord Mornington felt himself in a position French adventurers, under the immediate to bring matters to an issue. The "violent superintendence of a M. Raymond, who was and faithless" teharacter of the sultan. renjustly suspected of being in communication with Tippoo. the course of events might render this body a nucleus for all powers and persons jealous or envious of British supremacy. He therefore hastened to make overtures for a closer alliance with the Nizam; and on | incurred—the cession of the maritime prothe 1st of September, a new treaty was concluded, by which the subsidiary detachment) in his service was increased from two to six battalions, and the E. I. Cy. became pledged for his protection against any unjust demands on the part of the Mahrattas. Nizam consented to the immediate disbandment of Raymond's corps, and the surrender of their officers as prisoners of war; but as he manifested some hesitation regarding the fulfilment of these stipula-tions, the French cantonments were unexpectedly surrounded by the whole English force, in conjunction with a body of the Hyderabad cavalry. The men, already disaffected,* upon a promise of continued employment and the payment of arrears, laid down their weapons; the officers were quietly arrested, and, in a few hours, 14,000 men, possessing a train of artillery and a 5th of March, the British force, under well-supplied arsenal, were completely dis-The private armed and disorganised. property and arrears due to the officers were carefully secured to them by the governorgeneral, and arrangements made for their Mornington truly declared, "that an army honourable treatment and speedy transport to their own country. The primary importance of neutralising the danger of French influence at the court of the Nizam, did not blind Lord Mornington to the advisability of avoiding hostilities with the Mahrattas. The supremacy of the adoption of measures for the complete | Nana Furnavees and his baby peishwa, had given place to that of Sindia and Baice The pledge of co-operation, in the event of a war with Mysoor, was given by them, but

These precautionary measures concluded, dered it necessary to take summary steps Lord Mornington felt that for the reduction of his power and arrogance, which had again become alarming. The abandonment of his French connexions was at first all that was desired; but the expense of military preparations having been vince of Canara, with other territory and a large sum of money, the establishment of accredited residents on the part of the E. I. Cy. and their allies at his capital, and the expulsion of all Frenchmen from his service and dominions, were now demanded. Tippoo resorted to his old plan of evasion, hoping to procrastinate until the season for attacking Seringapatam should be past; and when hard driven, wrote a tardy consent to receive an English envoy to negotiate terms of more intimate alliance with that nation, while, at the same time, in his capacity of citizen and wearer of the red cap of liberty, he dispatched an embassy to the French Directory, soliciting speedy assistance "to attack and annihilate for ever our common enemies."1

As on a previous occasion, his duplicity was met by a declaration of war; and on the General (afterwards Lord) Harris, and that of the Nizam under his son Mecr Alum, entered the Mysoor territory, with the intent of marching directly upon the capital. Lord more completely appointed, more amply and liberally supplied in every department, or more perfect in its discipline and in the acknowledged experience, ability, and zeal of its officers, never took the field in India."& The very abundance of the equipments of the invaders formed, in some sort, an im-

Nizam, and a large body of Hyderabad cavalry. The army of the western coast, assembled at Cananore, under General Stuart, amounted to 6,420 men, of whom, 1,617 were Europeans; while a third corps, under Colonels Read and Brown, from the southern districts of the Carnatic, at once threatened the enemy in flank, and secured abundance of men, including 2,635 cavalry, and 4,381 Europeans; to which was added the 6,500 men serving with the

^{*} M. Raymond, a man of considerable talent, died a few months before these events, and a struggle for ascendancy had induced disunion among the troops, who, it may be added, were avowed red republicans.

Words of Lord Cornwallis.

Wellesley Despatches, v., 15.

The army assembled at Vellore exceeded 20,000

pediment to their speedy progress; and this circumstauce, together with the cumbrous baggage of the Nizam's troops, and the innumerable camp followers, tended to produce so much confusion, that the forces were repeatedly compelled to halt, and destroy a part of the mass of stores with which they were encumbered; until at length, the loss of powder, shot, and other military stores, became sufficiently considerable to excite alarm. Nearly the whole of the draught and carriage bullocks, comprising upwards of 60,000, died in the march to Scringapatam, although it was scarcely retarded a day by the opposition of In the meantime, General the enemy. Stuart, with the force from Bombay, had crossed the western frontier, and been attacked on the 6th of March, by the sultan with a superior force, near Periapatam. After a brisk action, in which the rajah of Coorg effectively seconded the English general by personal bravery and commissariat supplies,* Tippoo, being worsted, drew off his army, and hastened to meet the main body of the enemy under General Harris. This he accomplished near Malavelly, on the Madoor river, but was again defeated with heavy loss. His subsequent attempts to impede or harass the progress of the invaders, were frustrated by their unexpected changes of route; and he learned with dismay, that the battering train, with the last of the army, had actually crossed the Cauvery fifteen miles east of Seringapatam, while he was yet at a distance, keeping gnard in an opposite direction,—an indubitable proof how greatly his system of intelligence fell short of that maintained Deeply disappointed, he by his father. summoned his chief officers to his pre-sence. "We have arrived," he said, "at our last stage; what is your determination?" "To die with you," was the unanimous reply; and the assembly separated, * The rajah of Coorg had collected 6,360,000 lbs.

of rice, and 560,000 lbs. of grain, for the use of the war, warranted praise equal to that awarded him on the previous occasion, of having been "the only ally who had performed all his obligations with fidelity, efficiency, and honour."—(Mysoor, iii., 247.) It is no disparagement to the acknowledged merits and peculiarly objectively expected of the rain, to and peculiarly chivalrous character of the rajah, to add, that he had the deepest wrongs, both as regarded family and national relationship, to avenge upon the usurping dynasty. The reduction of Coorg had been at first effected by Hyder, through treacherous interference, during a contested succession. Of the two families, one was destroyed; the representative of the other (Veer Rajunder) escaped ised by a public tender of 1,200 bullock-loads of rice.

after a tearful farewell, having resolved to intercept the expected passage of the English across the stream to the island on which Scringapatam is situated, and make death or victory the issue of a single battle. The equipments of the sultan were in order, and his troops well placed to contest the fords; but the advancing for did not approach them, but took up a position on the south-western side of the fort, on the 5th of April, exactly one month after crossing the Mysoor frontier, having advanced at the rate of not seven miles a-day on hostile ground, and not five from the commencement of the march. The consequence of this nuexpected tardiness, and of great loss of stores, was, that despite the extraordinary supplies assembled by the governorgeneral, it was ascertained, on the 18th of April, that but eighteen days' provision for the fighting men, at half allowance, remained in store.† The siege was of necessity carried on with the utmost diligence. The sultan made overtures for peace, but rejected the terms of the preliminary treaty now proposed-namely, the surrender of his remaining maritime territories, and of half his entire dominions, with the payment of two crore of sieca rupecs, and the total renunciation of French auxiliaries. Every hour's delay rendered the position of the allies more critical; and on the 28th, when the sultan renewed his proposals for a conference, he was informed that no ambassadors would be received unless accompanied by four of his sons and four of his generals (including Seyed Ghofar) as hostages, with a crore of rupees, in token of sincerity.

No answer was returned. Tippoo's hereditary aversion to the English had been raised to the highest pitch by the representatives of the French adventurers about his person. Naturally sanguine, he had buoyed himself up with expectations of the arrival of succours direct from France, from Egypt, from the hands of Tippoo, and upon the outbreak of the previous war, hastened to join the English. Notwithstanding the ruthless manner in which the population and resources of his country had been treated, he was able, by his intelligence and activity, to aid materially the operations of the Bombay army. Mill, who is little inclined to bestow praise on Indian princes, speaks of him as possessing a remarkable "enlargement of mind, and displaying a generosity and a heroism worthy of a more civilised state of society."—(v., 453.) Col. Wilks narrates many actions which confirm this testimony. So, also, does Major Dirom's Narrative.

There must have been, also, much disgraceful jobbery, the effects of which were happily neutral-

the progress of the siege drew from him al sinecre attempt at negotiation, his haughty spirit could not brook the humiliating conditions named as the price of peace, and he suffered hostilities to proceed, comforting himself with the idea that Seringapatam was almost invincible; that the failure of supplies would probably even now compel the enemy to withdraw; and that, at the worst, "it was better to die like a soldier, | than to live a miserable dependent on the infidels, in the list of their pensioned rajahs and nabobs." Despite the manliness of it." On the 3rd of May, a practicable Tippoo's words, his deeds evinced a strange breach (100 feet wide) was effected. On mixture of indecision and childish credulity. For years he had shown himself the higoted the oblation hefore arranged; and after an and relentless persecutor of his Hindoo subjects; and so effectual had been his tiny by the reflection of his own face in a measures, that only two Brahminical temples remained open throughout his dominions. Yet now, those very Brahmins, whom he had compelled to violate the first rules of their ereed, by fleshing their weapons on the bodies of sacred animals, were entreated to put up prayers on his dare the attempt by daylight; and he rebehalf, and the jebbum* was performed at great cost by the orders of a Mussulman sovereign, to whom all kinds of magical ineantation were professedly forbidden, and who simultaneously put up earnest and reiterated prayers in the mosque, requesting thereto the fervent amen of his Then he betook himself to the attendants. astrologers, and from them received statements calculated to deepen the depression by which his mind was rapidly hecoming unhinged. The evident progress of affairs might well furuish them with a clue to decypher the predictions of the stars, and a set of diagrams were gravely exhibited as warranting the conclusion, that so long as Mars should remain within a particular circle, the fort would hold out: he would touch the limit on the last day of the lunar month, the 4th of May; then it would be advisable to offer the oblations prescribed by law to deprecate an expected calamity. It of the actual assault, and he hastened to the is possible that the true movers in this breach along the northern rampart. singular scene may have been certain faithful servants of Tippoo Sultan, who, as the danger increased, beheld with grief his accustomed energy give place to a sort of despairing fatalism, alternating with bursts of forced gaiety, which were echoed

* See previous p. 357. Col. Baillie's detachment, and not released until 1784. less commendable feelings, have been suffi-

or from the Mauritius; and when at length | back by the parasites by whom he had become exclusively surrounded. Ghofar was one of the most zealous and able of the Mysoorean commanders. Although wounded at an early period of the siege, he did not relax his exertions for the defence of the capital, or his efforts to awaken its master to action, despite the despairing exclamation-" He is surrounded by boys and flatterers, who will not even let him see with his own eyes. I do not wish to survive the result. I am going about in search of death, and cannot find the morning of the 4th, the sultan offered attempt to ascertain the aspect of his desjar of oil, returned to his accustomed station on the fortifications. Seved Ghofar, seeing the trenches unusually crowded, sent word that the attack was about to commence; but the courtiers persuaded their infatuated lord that the enemy would never plied, that it was doubtless right to he on the alert, although the assault would certainly not be made except under cover of night.

> Excited by such mistaken security, the brave officer hastened towards the sultan. "I will go," said he, "and drag him to the breach, and make him see by what a set of wretches he is surrounded: I will compel him to exert himself at this last moment." The arrival of a party of pioneers, to cut off the approach of the foe by the southern rampart, induced him to delay his intention for the purpose of first giving them their instructions; and, while thus engaged, a cannon-ball struck him lifeless to the ground, and saved him from witnessing the realisation of his worst anticipations.

Tippoo was about commencing his noonday repast, when he learned with dismay the fate of his brave servant. The meal was scarcely ended before tidings were brought

The leader of the storming party was Major-general Baird, who had, at his own request, been deputed to head the attack on the fortress, within whose walls he had been immured in irons for three years and a-half.+ The hope of releasing captives treacherously detained, and of preventing such faithless Baird was taken prisoner with the survivors of outrages for the future, would, apart from

THE DEATH OF TIPPOO SULTAN-1799.

eieut to exeite to the utmost a less ardeut of the two eldest sons of Tippoo, from whom to the parameter of the with difficulty obtained warrant for the to the utmost a less aracut of the two claest sons of tippoo, from whom Mounting the parapet of he with difficulty obtained warrant for the Mounting the parapet of occuration of the nalace. within which liew of both armies he drew the breach, in view of both armies he drew his sword, and, in a voice which thrilled temperameut. through every heart, called to the columns into which the assaulting force* had been divided, "to follow him and prove them, selves worthy the name of British soldiers." A forloru hope, composed of a sergeant and twelve men, led the van of either columu, followed by two subalteru detaeliments, and were met on the slope of the breach by a small but resolute body of Mysooreaus. Nearly the whole of the first combatants perished, but their place was rapidly supplied by the forces led by Baird; and in six minutes after the energetic call to arms, the British colours were planted on the summit of the breach. This important step accomplished, much danger and difficulty remained; for the traverses, especially along the sultan? the northern rampart, were stronger than had been expected, and the sultan in person animated the exertions of his de-After much hard fighting, the British columns overcame all intermediate obstacles, and menaced Tippoo and his sup-The confusion then became complete: the Mysooreans porters both in front and rear. fled in various directions; some through a gateway in the rampart opening on the palace, some over the fortifications, and others parace, some over the forumeations, and others by a water-gate leading to the river.

Sultan, after long fighting on foot, being sultan, after long was seen to mount his slightly wounded, was seen to mount him the base was supplied to the long state of the long st horse, but what he had next done, no one knew. It was conjectured that he had taken refuge within the palace; and the chief persons admitted to his confidence during the last few perilous days, alleged that obscure hints had escaped him of an intention to follow the ancient Indian custom, by putting to death the females of his family, destroying certain private papers, and then sallying forth to perish on the swords of his focs. According to instructions previously framed, Major Allan was deputed to proceed to the palace with a flag of truee, and offer protection to Tippoo and every one in it, on the proviso of immediate and unconditional surrender. The major laid aside his sword, in * Comprising 2,494 Europeans, and 1,882 natives. The fact was subsequently ascertained by exchanging the bodies. The rumour being in itself huming the bodies. The rumour being sufficiently probable, may palliate, but cannot justify, whereabouts of Tippoo.—(Thornton's India, iii., 59.) assurances of Major Allan, to draw from them the others, who had surrendered on the faith of the threats used by General Baird to the princes and the threats used by General Baird to the princes and the threats used by General Baird to the princes and the threats used by General Baird to the princes and the threats used by General Baird to the princes and the threats used by General Baird to the princes and the threats used by General Baird to the princes and the threats used by General Baird to the princes and the threats used by General Baird to the princes and the princes and the princes are the pr evidence of his peaceable intentions, and prevailed upon the attendants to conduct him and two brother officers to the presence occupation of the palace, within which many hundred armed men were assembled; while, without the walls, a large body of troops were drawn up, with General Baird at their head. The fierce excitement of a hard-won field had been increased by the horrible and only too well authenticated information of the massacre of about thirteeu Europeans taken during the siege; yet the torrent of exceration and invective was hushed in deep silence when the sons of the hated despot passed through the ranks as prisoners, on their way to the British camp. The royal apartments were scarched, due earo heing taken to avoid inflicting any ucedless injury on the feelings of the ladies of the harem, by removing them to distinct rooms; but still the important question remained unanswered—what had become of

At length it was discovered that private intelligence had reached the killedar, or chief officer in command, that Tippoo was emer omeer in communu, that Tippoo was lying under the arch of the gateway open-General Baird proeceded to the spot, and searched a dense mass of dead and dying, but without success, until a Hindoo, styled Rajah Khan, ing on the inner fort. who lay wounded near the palanquin of the sultan, pointed out the spot where his master had fallen. Tippoo had received two musket-balls in the side, when his point would send make the sultant the side, when his point would send make him points. being wounded sank under him. Rajah Khan, after vainly striving to carry him away, urged the uccessity of disclosing his away, urgca the uccessity of disclosing his rank as the sole chance for his preservation. This Tippoo peremptorily forbade, and continued to lie prostrate from the loss of blood and fatigue, half-buried under a heap of bis brave defenders, until an English soldier coming up to the spot, strove to seize the gold buckle of his sword belt, upon which he partly raised himself, seized a sabre that lay beside him, and aimed a desperate blow at his assailant, who, in return, shot him

Thus perished Tippoo Sultan, forty-seventh year of his age. The body, through the temple. when eventually dragged forth, was found to have been rifled of every ornament except an amulet on the right arm, immediately The head was unthe threats used by General Baird to the princes and below the shoulder.

covered, and, despite the ball which had measure in striving to put down the use of entered a little above the right ear and lodged in the cheek, and three wounds in the body, the stern dignity of the countenance,* its glowing complexion, the expression of the dark full eyes unclosed and surmounted by small arched eyebrows marred by no distortion, were altogether so lifelike, that the effect, heightened by the rich colouring of the waistband and shoulderhelt, almost deceived the hystanders; and Colonel Wellesley and Major Allan hent over the body hy the uncertain and flickering glare of torch-light, and felt the pulse and heart, hefore heing convinced that they were indeed looking on a corpse. remains were deposited heside those of Hyder Ali, in the superb mausoleum of Lâll Baug, with every ceremonial demanded by Mussulman usage. The minute-gun and other military honours, practised by Europeans, were paid by order of the commander-in-chief, a ceremonial which, however well intended, was misplaced. would have been hetter taste to have suffered the bereaved family of the sultan, who had died in defence of his capital, to bury their dead, undisturbed by the presence Terrific peals of of his triumphant foes. thunder and lightning, to an extent remarkable even in that tempestuous district, burst over the island of Seringapatam, and formed a fitting close to the funereal rites of the second and last representative of a brief but blood-stained dynasty. The prediction of Hyder was fulfilled: the empire he had won his son had lost, and with it The romantic circumstances life itself. attendant on the death of Tippoo may tend to throw a false halo over his character; but admiration for his personal bravery, or eveu better-grounded praise for his excellent

The sultan was about five feet ten inches in height, had a short neck and square shoulders; his limbs were slender, feet and hands remarkably small, and nose aquiline. His dress consisted of a jacket of fine white linen, loose drawers of flowered chintz, a erimson girdle, with a handsome pouch slung over his shoulder by a belt of red and green silk.

† This expression, says Col. Wilks, was noticed only by those who saw Tippoo for the first time; it wore off the more speedily owing to his excessive garrulity and harsh, inharmonious voice.

† Two officers and several privates were killed. § History of Mysoor, iii., 269.

¶ On the 4th of May, there were in the fort 13,739 regular troops, and 8,100 outside and in the intrenebments, with 120 Frenchmen, under the command of a chef de brigade, M. Chapuis. In the assault, 8,000 Mysooreans were killed, including twenty-four principal officers killed and wounded, beside every description.—(Beatson's War with Tippoo.)

intoxicating preparations, which had become a very curse to India, must not be permitted to disguise the fact that, with few exceptions, his career was one of blood and rapine, beside which that of Hyder appears just and compassionate.

Tippoo manifested remarkable industry in his endeavours to establish the reputation of a reformer; but the regulations framed for the government of his dominious, were enforced by penalties of so revolting a character, as alone to prove the lawgiver unfit to exercise authority over his fellowmen; equally so, whether these were prompted by diabolical wickedness, or the aberrations of a diseased intellect. "History," says Colonel Wilks, "exhibits no prior example of a code perverting all possible purposes of punishment as a public example, combining the terrors of death with coldblooded irony, filthy ridicule, and obscene mutilation—the pranks of a monkey with the abominations of a monster." Such a despotism, based on usurpation and fraud, and exercised with unparalleled ferocity, Britain may well rejoice in having been permitted to abolish.

The total military establishment of Tippoo was estimated at about 100,000, including matchlockmen and peous (revenue officers or police); his field army at 17,470 effective troops. The granaries, arsenals, and magazines of all kiuds in Scringapatam, were abundantly stored; || but a very exaggerated idea had, as is commonly the case, been formed of the amount of his treasure in gold and jewels, the total value of which did not reach a milliou and a-half sterling, and was entirely appropriated by the conqueriug army. In acknowledgment of the energy and forethought displayed by the numbers of inferior rank. The total loss of the British, during the siege, was twenty-two officers killed and forty-five wounded (twenty-five of these in the storming of the citadel); rank and file—Luropeans, 181 killed, 622 wounded, twenty-two missing: natices, 119 killed, 420 wounded, and 100 missing. In the fort were found 929 pieces of ordnance (373 brass guns, sixty mortars, eleven howitzers, 466 iron guns, and twelve mortars), of which 287 were mounted on the fortifications: there were also 121,400 round shot; 520 lbs. of gunpowder, and 99,000 muskets, earlines, &c. Within the fortress were cleven large ponder-magazines; seventy-two expense magazines; eleven armories for making and furnishing small arms; three buildings with machines for boring guns; four large arsenals, and seventeen other storehouses, containing accourrements, swords, &c.; and aucient llindoo palace to a miserable hovel, where they were found by the English those restored to the Hindoo dynasty, to nuthorities, in 1799, in a state of deep the value of thirteen lass of pagodast per poverty and lumiliation. Their sorrow was turned into joy and gratitude on being informed that the conquerors had resolved, chief officers, a large overplus remained, and simply to restore them to liberty, but the division of which, between the English to place the young prince Kistna Raj Oodaveer on the throne of his fathers, in their ancient capital of Mysoor, with a revenue exceeding that of the former Hindoo kingdom. The English reserved to themselves, by treaty, the right of inter- batore and Daramporam, the intervening posing with paramount authority, in the country between the territories of the E. event of any financial or political questions [1. Cv. on the Coromandel coast, and on that arising similar to those which had long distracted the Carnatic; but so far from employing their unquestioned supremacy to vest (as had been the case on former oceasions) all power and profit in English funetionaries, nearly every office, civil and military, was left to be filled by the natives themselves. Pournea, the experienced and trustworthy Hindoo chief minister under the usurping dynasty, was continued in office with the decided approbation of the female guardians of the young rajah. Colonel Wellesley, in all respects, but especially by judicious abstinence from needless interference, justified his selection for military commandant; while the rectitude and abilitics as a linguist, of Colonel (afterwards Sir Barry) Close, facilitated his satisfactory fulfilment of the deliente position of politi-The result was, that the cal resident. Marquis Wellesley, at the close of his memorable administration, was enabled to declare, that the actual success of the arrangement of Mysoor had realised his most sanguine expectations.

Ţ.
•	8

* Literally so, for he was seated on the ancient ivory throne, which Aurungzehe is said to have expressly ranctioned his nucestor in using, and which was found in a lumber-room of the palace after the siege. The throne of Tippoo was taken to pieces, its various parts forming splendid trophics of victory. The ascent to the musnud was by small silver steps un ench side, its support n tiger, somewhat nbove the natural size, in a standing attitude, entirely covered with plates of pure gold, the eyes and teeth being represented by jewels of suitable colours. A gilded pillar supported a canopy fringed with pearls; from the centre was suspended an image of the Uma, a bird about the size and shape of a small pigeon, formed of diamonds, rubies, and emeralds inlaid in gold, and valued in India at 1,600 guineas. It was presented to King George III., as a fitting tribute to royalty, being generally regarded in the East as the harbinger of victory and sovereign power to the favoured individual whom it deigned to overshadow. By n singular coincidence, a bird of this "august" species (for such, according to M. d'Herbelot, is the Tippoo to brenk faith with the English .- (Duff.)

Of the usurpations of Hyder, besides annum; and after liberal provision for the families of Hyder and Tippoo, and their and the Nizam, formed the basis of a new treaty.; The former took possession of the fortress, city, and island of Scringapatam, the districts of Canara, including all the sea-coast of Mysoor, together with Coimof Malahar; of the forts and posts forming the heads of the principal passes above the Ghants, on the table-land of Mysoor, and the district of Wynaad. To the Nizam were given territories yielding an equal revenue with those appropriated by the English in the districts of Gooty, Goornmeondali, and the tract of country situated along the military line of Chittledroog, Sera, Nimdidroog, and Colar, but without the forts, which it was considered would strengthen, to a dangerous extent, the position of a fluctuating and doubtful ally. The course to he adopted with regard to the Mahrattas, was a difficult question. The peishwa had wholly failed in his engagements of co-operation against Tippoo; § nevertheless, the governor-general deemed it politic to offer him n share in the conquered territory on certain conditions, which he looked upon as necessary preliminaries to the establishment of a solid and satisfactory peace; especially the reception of an English subsidiary force, and an amicable adjustment, according to English arbitration, of the claim of chout meaning of its Persian name) built its nest in a grovo of trees, under the shade of which the governorgeneral dictated his despatches while resident at Mndras, for the purpose of more conveniently super-intending the conduct of the war. The natives hailed with delight the prosperous omen, and received the tidings of the capture of Seringapatam as confirmation of the victorious augury conveyed by the presence of the Uma, which the marquis was subsequently empowered to add to his crest, with the motto, "Super Indos protulit Imperium."

A pagoda was then above eight shillings in value. The whole of Tippoo's annual revenue was estimated at 30,40,000 pagodas. To the rajah of Mysoor was assigned 13,60,000; to Nizam Ali, 5,30,000; to the L. I. Cy. 5,37,000; for the maintenance of the families of Hyder and Tippoo (in charge of the British government), 2,40,000; and for Kummur-u-Deen, commander of Tippan's cavalry, and his family (in charge of the Nizam), 7,00,00 pagodas.—(Duff, iii., 177.) § Bajee Rno had netually accepted a heavy bribe from Tippon to break faith with the English —(Duff)

his young ward as illegal, and caused him ment; Ameer Sing was deposed, and Serfoto be confined and ernelly ill-treated. The fire proclaimed rajah, in accordance with the vigilance and untiring evertion of Swartz* Iterms of a Ireaty, slated October, 1799; by occasioned a scarching investigation, and which he remuneed all claim to political the evidence brought forward on the matter led both Lord Cornwallis and Sir John Shore to consider the claims of Serfojee as well | The oppression exercised by the net revenues. Ameer Sing over the widows of the deceased rajah, was accompanied by general maladministration. During the first war with Tippoo, the management of Tanjore had been assumed by the linglish, as the sole means of rendering its resources available against the common foe; and on the conclusion of peace, a prolonged discussion prove concerning the propriety of restoring promised supplies, and given rise to suspito power a ruler whose legal and moral! claims were of so questionable a character. His failing health induced Lord Wellesley The supreme government, fearing to incur to delay the contemplated changes; but on the imputation of excessive rigour, replaced his death, in 1801, the dispositions made by Ameer Sing in his former position: but the lim in favour of his illegitimate son, Ali home authorities do not appear to have Hooseein, a minor, were set aside in favour approved of this decision; for in June, 1719, of Arim-ad-Doulah, a nephew of the late they expressly instructed Lard Wellesley prince, who made over to the company all not to relinquish possession of the territories claim to real power, on condition of receiving of Arcot and Tanjore, which, in the event the title of nabob, and the allotment of a of hostilities with Tippoo, would "of course lifth part of the net revenues of the Carcome under the company's management," without special orders to that effect. measure thus taken for granted by the directors, had not been adopted by the governor-general, who deemed the brief and decisive character of the war a sufficient! argument against a step the immediate! effect of which "would have been a considerable failure of actual resources, at a The | period of the utmost exigency." disputed succession afforded a better pleafor the assumption of the powers of govern-

* Swartz spared no pains in implanting religious principles, or in cultivating the naturally gifted in-tellect of Serfojce. The death of the good missionary, in 1795, prevented him from witnessing the elevation of his grateful pupil, who honoured the me-mory of his benefactor, less by the erection of a stately monument, than by his own life and character. Bishop Heber, in noticing the varied acquirements of Serfojee, states that he quoted Foureroy, Lavoisier, Linnwas, and Buffon fluently; that he had "formed a more accurate judgment of the merits of Shakspeare than that so felicitously expressed by Lord Byron," and was "much respected by the English officers in the neighbourhood, as a real good judge of a horse, and a cool, hold, and deadly shot at a liger."—(Journal, ii., 450.)

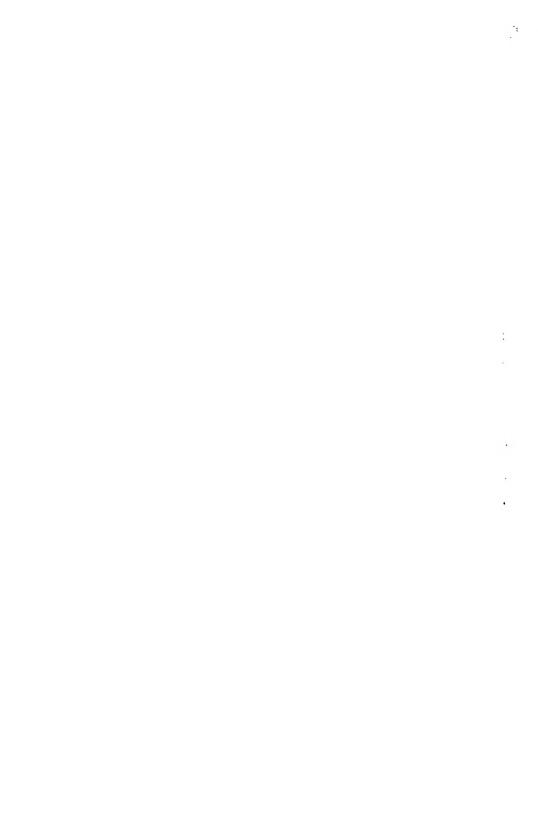

† The Ley to the eypher was found among the private papers of the sultan. The English were designated by the term net-concers: the Niram, by authority, in return for nominal rank, and the more substantial advantage of a prusion of one lac of star pagodas, with a fifth of The assertion of complete authority over the Carnatic, was expedited by the discovery, consequent on the capture of Seringapatam, of a secret correspondence, in cypher, | carried on between Mohammed Ali and his successor, Omilutal-Omrah, with Tippoo, in direct violation of the treaty of 1792. The conduct of the nabob during the late war, in withholding cions of treachery which were now confirmed, natic for his support. The company further The engaged to provide for the family of the preceding nabobs, and to pay their delits. The government of the extensive and populous, though dilapidated city of Surat, was assumed by the company in 1800; the Magul nabah, or governor, resigning his claims on receipt of a pension of a lac of rapees annually, in addition to a fifth of the net revenues guaranteed to him and his heirs.

> The commencement of the nineteenth as favouring the views of the directors, Mill exclaims, "Nothing surely ever was more fortunate than such a discovery at such a time." Yet, although plainly intimating the possibility of fabricating evidence to prove a lie, he is compelled, by his own truthfulness, to bear witness to the character of the great man, against whom he appears to be, on the whole, strangely prejudiced. "With regard to Lord Wellesley," he mids, "even his faults bear so little affinity with this species of vice, and his most conspicuous sirines are so directly opposed to it, that we may safely infer it to be as unlikely in his case as in any that can well be supposed, that he would fabricate evidence to attain the objects of his desire."-(vi., 312.)
>
> 1 The governor-general was disposed to confirm

the will of the late nabob in favour of Ali Hoossein, despite his illegitimacy; but his refusal (100 late withdrawn) to accept the terms offered on behalf of the E.I. Cy., occasioned his being altogether set aside. that of nothingness; the Mahratias, as despicable. He was carried off by alyzentery in the following years. In commenting on the disclosure of these proofs of Ameer Sing, the deposed rajah of Tanjore, died a faithlessness on the part of the nabobs of the Carnatic, natural death in the commencement of 1802.

France with 1,400 regular troops, and creased before a state of scenre and transmil £100,000 in specie. The renewal of war in Europe afforded a reason for the reoceupation of Pondicherry in 1803, and enabled to justify measures, which might have been the E. I. Cr. to direct undivided attention to the complicated hostilities then carried on with the Mahrattas, the only Imlian people possessing in themselves resources to maintain imaided a long contrst, The most vulgerable part of the British frontier lay contiguous to the country possessed by Sindia. The death of Nana l'urnavecs, in 1800, left this enterprising chief up formidable rival at the court of Poona; and Bajee Rao the prishwa, appeared little less entirely number his control than the pageant-emperor of Delhi. In the event, therefore, of a struggle for supremacy, arising out of the numerous causes of quarrel abounding on both sides, the Mahratta confederacy, including the rajali of Berar, the representative of the Holear family in Malwa, and the Guicowar of Gurerat, with other leaders of minor rank, led by Simlia and the prishwa, and aided by the skill and science of French officers, could rollect a force against their European rivals which it would require a costly excrince of blood and treasure to repel. The best mode of averting this dangerous possibility appeared to be the formation of a strict alliance with one, at least, if not with the whole of the Maliratta chiefs. The error of Hastings, in sanctioning the aggressions of Sindia in Hindoostan Proper, had furnished experience which strengthened the convirtions of Lord Wellesley with regard to the policy of forming connexious with native powers, only on conditions calculated to scenre an ascendancy, more or less direct, in their councils. Perfect neutrality amid scenes of foreign and domestic warfare, venality, extortion, and bloodshed, could scarcely have been recommended by considerations of thity or of policy; and such a course, even supposing it to have been practicable, must have involveil the infraction of old as well as recent treaties, offensive and defensive, with the Nizam and others. As for Lord Wellesley, his clear and statesmanlike view of the ease, formed after eareful examination of the actual state of British power in India, was never marred by doubt or hesitation in the moment of action. Fettered by the parliamentary denunciation against the extension, under any circumstances, of the Anglo-Indian empire, yet, convinced existing in Rajpootana. Dowlut Rao posthat its foundations must be largely in- sessed equal ambition and energy with his DIV. XI.

authority could be reasonably expected, be was often driven to addage secondary causes sufficiently vindicated on the score of political necessity, since they involved no moral wrong. The wretchedness of the people of the Carnatic and Onde, abundantly excuse the steps taken to place them under the immediate superintendence of the company, in preference to employing, or rather continning to employ, the military force of England in riveting the chains of a foreign drspotism, founded on usurpation of the worst himl, that of sworn servants betraying their master in the hour of weakness. There were no lawful heirs to these states; or, if there were, they should have been searched for in the ancient records of the Hindaos: the Mohammedans were all introders in the first instance, and the existing leaders of every denomination, with few exceptions, rebellious subjects. Why, each one of the African chiefs, whom English colonists and Dutch boors have so unsempulously exiled from their native territories, had more of hercilitary right and constitutional privilege . on his side than all the Indo-Mohammedan dynastics put together. The case of the Hindoos is widely different; but in exense, or rather in justification, of the combact of the company, it may be urged that they found the great majority of the native inhabitants of India, under Moslem rulers, a conquered and much oppressed people; and that, if England do ber thity as a Christian state, they will, and-with all her errors and shortcomings, it may be aibled, they have materially benefited by the change.

The Rajpoot states were the only ones which, although brought in collision with the Mogal empire, were never wholly absorbed in it. The Mahratta confederation had been founded on the ruins of the vast dominion won by the strong arm of Anrangzehe, and lost through persecuting bigotry and the exactions consequent on unceasing war. Sevojee and Bujee Rao (the first usurping peishwa, or prime minister) built up Mahratta power. Mailtoo Rao I. arrested its dissolution; but Mahadajee Simlia, prompted by overweening ambition, enlarged bis chiefilom until its overgrown dimensions exceeded in extent the whole remainder of the Mahratta empire, and threatened speedily to destroy the degree of independence still predecessor, but far less judgment and mode-The retirement to Europe, in 1796, of the experienced and unprejudiced leader | of the European trained bands, De Boigne, and the accession to authority of a French leader named Perron, with strong national feelings, gave a decidedly anti-English bias to the counsels of Dowlut Rao. The peishwa Bajce Rao, knew this, and had, in the time of Sir John Shore, courted the protection of the supreme government, as a means of securing to himself some degree of authority. The danger of provoking war, by giving offence to Sindia, induced the refusal of this request. Lord Wellesley was attended with a reversal of the policy of hoth parties. Perceiving | made since the hattle of Paniput, in 1760, the great advantage to be derived from the permanent settlement of a subsidiary force | leaders who escaped the carnage of that day. at Poons, the governor-general formally Having retreated into Central India, he emoffered the services of a body of the company's troops, for the protection of the peishwa and the revival of the energies of his government. The very circumstance of had established considerable influence in the boon, once urgently sought, being now pressed on his acceptance, would have sufficed to ensure its rejection by so capricious and distrustful a person as Bajee Rao: but other reasons—especially the meditated departure of Sindia, to superintend his own disaffected troops in Hindoostan, and the impending war between Tippoo and the English-were not wanting to confirm his determination. The conquest of Mysoor again changed the his grandfather in 1766, but survived him aspect of affairs; but Bajee Rao, in accordance with the sagacious counsels of Nana Furnavces,* even after the death of the wary minister, continued to reject the alliance pressed on him by the English, until an unexpected chain of events compelled him to look to them exclusively for help and protection.

SINDIA AND HOLCAR.—A new actor had recently come forward on the stage of Mahratta politics, whose progress seemed likely to diminish the authority of Sindia, and enable Bajee Rao to exercise unques-Poona. Of these tioned supremacy at anticipated results only the former was realised; the predatory chief in question, Jeswunt Rao Holear, proving strong enough not only to harass but to defeat the Nana Furnavees was imprisoned by Sindia; but being released in 1798, on payment of ten lacs of rupees, he accepted office under Bajee Rao.

When the power of Ahalya Bye became established, the beautiful but wicked wife of Ragoba sent a female attendant to bring her an account of the last part of the description, Anundee Bye re-the personal appearance of a princess so highly cele-marked, "But she is not handsome, you say."

troops of Sindia, and drive Bajee Rao from his capital. The founders of the Sindia and Holear families were, it will be remembered, men of humble origin; they became distinguished as leaders of Pindarries, a class of the lowest freebooters who had from early times infested the Decean. Bajee Rao I., though always ready to avail himself of their services for the invasion of Mogul provinces, took care to exclude such dangerous subjects from Maharashtra, by habitually stationing them in Malwa, where the power of the two leaders became paramount. The progress and history of Mahadajee Sindia has been The necession to office of incidentally told in previous pages; but of Mulhar Rao Holear little mention has been when he was named as one of the few ployed himself, during the remaining years of his life, in settling and consolidating his possessions in Malwa and the Deccan. He Jeypoor, and obtained from the rajah an annual tribute of three lacs and a-half of rupees. A considerable part of the province of Candeish had been allotted to him for the maintenance of his troops; beside which, several rillages were granted, by the peishwa and the Nizam, to the females of his family. The only lineal descendant of Mulhar Rao, a vicious youth of unsound mind, succeeded only nine months. His mother Ahalya (pronounced Alea) Bye, a singularly gifted woman, declared her intention, as the sole representative of both the deceased rulers, to select a successor. Ragobat attempted to interfere; but Madhoo Rao, with characteristic chivalry, directed his uncle to desist from further opposition to the projects of a person whose right and ability to manage affairs were alike indisputable. With the entire approbation of the leading military commanders in the army of her deceased relatives, Ahalya Bye took the reins of power in her own hands. The Mohammedan custom of rigid seclusion had happily not been imitated by Mahratta females; Ahalya Bye had therefore no conventional impediment of any kind to check the free exercise of brated, and so universally beloved. The description of a small slight woman, with irregular features, but "n heavenly light on her countenance," set the fair intrigante at rest as to any rivalry in the attractions by which she set most store; and, without noticing

her physical or mental powers. Still there were duties inconsisteut with a woman's sphere of action; and to ensure their fulfilment, she formally adopted as her sou,* and elected as commander-in-chief, Tookajče Holear, the leader of the household troops; of the same tribe, but no otherwise related to Mulhar Rao. Like our great Elizabeth, the fitness of her ministers proved the judgment of the sclector. The conduct of Tookajce, during a period of above thirty years, justified the confidence reposed in him. Ahalya Bye died, aged sixty, worn out with public cares | nating it with honour will then have passed." and fatigues, aggravated by domestic sorrows; but without having had, during that long interval, a single misunderstanding with her brave and honest coadjutor. The history of the life of this extraordinary woman, given by Sir John Malcolm, affords evidence of the habitual exercise of the lofticst virtues; and it is difficult to say, whether manly resolve or feminine gentleness predominated, so marvellously were they blended in her character. The utter absence of vanity, whether as a queen or a womau;† the fearless and strictly conscientious exercise of despotie power, combined with the most unaffected humility and the deepest sympathy for suffering; learning without pedantry, eheerfulness without levity, immaculate rectitude with perfect charity and tolerance; -these and other singular combinations would almost tempt one to regard Ahalya Bye as too faultless for fallen and sinful humanity, but for the few drawbacks entailed by her rigid adherence to almost every portion of the modern Brahminical creed, in which, happily, persecution has still no part, though self-inflieted austerities and superstitious observances have gained a most undue prominence. The declining age of the princess was saddened by the resolution taken by her only surviving child, Muchta Bye, of self-immolation on the grave of her husband. The battle-field had widowed Ahalya Bye at twenty; yet-despite the modern heresy of the Hindoos, that the voluntary sacrifice of life, on the part of the bereaved survivor, ensures immediate reunion between those whom death has divided, and their mutual entrance into the highest heaven, she had not been tempted by this lying doctrine to commit suicide,

* Although Tookajee always addressed her by the name of "mother," he was considerably her senior.
† A Brahmin wrote a book in her praise. Ahalya Bye, after patiently hearing it read, remarked, that she was "a weak, sinful woman, not deserving

but had lived to protect her children and establish the independence of the Holear principality. Now, flinging herself at the feet of Muchta Byc, she besought her child, by every argument a false ereed could sanetion, to renounce her purpose. The reply of the daughter was affectionate but deeided. "You are old, mother," she said. "and a few years will end your pious life. My only child and husband are gone, and when you follow, life I feel will be insupportable; but the opportunity of termi-Every effort, short of eoereion, was vainly practised to prevent the intended "suttee;" ‡ but the unfaltering resolve of the devoted widow remained unshaken, and her wretched parent accompanied the procession, with forced composure, to the funeral pyre: but when the first vivid burst of flame told of the actual consummation of the sacrifice, self-eommand was lost in anguish; the agouising shricks of their beloved ruler mingled with the exulting shouts of the immense multitude; and excited almost to madness, the aged princess gnawed the hands she could not liberate from the two Brahmins, who with difficulty held her back from rushing to die with her child. After three days spent in fasting and speechless grief, Ahalya Bye recovered her equanimity so far as to resume her laborious round of daily occupations, including four hours spent in receiving ambassadors, hearing petitions or complaints, and transacting other business in full durbar or court; and she seemed to find solace in erecting a beautiful monument to the memory of those she lamented, and in increasing the already large proportion of the revenues devoted to religious purposes and public works. Her eharity was not bounded by the limits of the principality: it began at home (for she fed her own poor daily), but it extended to far-distant lands. The pilgrim journeying to Juggernaut in Cuttack, in the far north amid the snowy peaks of the Himalaya, or south almost to Cape Comorin, found eause to bless the sympathy for individual suffering, as well as the reverence for holy shrines, manifested by Abalya Bye with royal munifiecnee; while the strange traveller, without claim of creed or country, was arrested such fine encomiums," directed the book to be thrown into the Nerbudda, which flowed beneath her palace window, and took no farther notice of the author.—(Malcolm's Central India, i., 193.)

1 Suttee or sati, denotes the completed sacrifice.

on his weary, dusty road, by water-hearers stationed at intervals to supply the wants of the passer-by; and the very oxen near her dwelling at Mhysir, were refreshed by cooling draughts brought by the domestic the sole authority centred in Tookajee servants of the compassionate princess.

The beasts of the field, the birds of the nir, the fishes of the sea, had all their allotted share of her bounty; and however puerile some of her minor arrangements may sound to European cars, or fauntical the habits of a sovereign who never discarded the plain white weeds of Hindoo widowhood, or touched animal food; vet, probably, these very traits of character conspired to add to the reputation her government retains in Malwa as the hest ever known, the personal reverence paid to her memory as more than a saint, as an Avatar, or incarnation of the Deity. A blessing rested on the efforts of Ahalya Bye, despite the fettering power of heathen darkness. Indore grew, beneath her sway, from a village to a wealthy city; bankers, merchants, farmers, and peasants, all throve heneath her vigilant and fostering care. Malcolm states, that he made inquiries among all ranks and classes in the countries she had governed, and could elicit no information calculated to detract, in the judgment of the most impartial inquirer, from the effect of the culogiums, or rather lilessings, poured forth whenever her name was mentioned, except the large sums bestowed on Brahmins, and the expenditure of state funds in the crection and maintenance of public works on foreign soil. The remarks made by one of her chief ministers, when commenting on what Sir John considered misdirected hounty, afford a suggestive text alike to eastern and western potentates. He asked, "whether Ahalya Bye, by spending double the money on au army that she did in charity and good works, could have preserved her country! for above thirty years in a state of profound peace, while she rendered her subjects liappy and herself adored? No person doubts the sincerity of her picty; but if In 1798, he joined his fortunes with those she had merely possessed worldly wisdom, she could have devised no means so admirably calculated to effect the object. Among the princes of her own nation, it would have been looked upon as sacrilege to have become her enemy, or, indeed, not to have defended her against any hostile attempt. She was of the latter chief, in 1800, the natives of considered by all in the same light. The Central India date the commencement of Nizam of the Decean and Tippoo Sultan granted her the same respect as the peishna, and Mohammedans joined with Hindoos in prayers for her long life and prosperity."*

After the death of Ahalya Bye, in 1795, Holear, who survived his excellent mistress about two years. He left two legitimate sons, Casee and Mulhar Rao. The elder was of weak intellect and deformed person; the younger, able and active. Alulya Bye and Tookajee had hoped that the example of their manimity would be followed by the hrothers in the joint exercise of authority, but neither of the princes were capable of the self-denial and lofty rectitude necessary for such a course; and preparations for a war of succession were at once commenced, but abruptly terminated by the treacherous interference of Dowlnt Rao Sindia, who having inveigled Mulhar Rao to his camp, caused him to be shot through the head; and retaining possession of Casee Rao, not only compelled him to pay the heavy price stipulated for the murder of his brother, hut reduced him to the condition of a mere An avenger arose unexpectedly to scourge the unprincipled ambition of Sindia. Two illegitimate sons of Holear, Jeswunt Rao and Etojee, survived their father; the latter was seized and imprisoned by Sindia and Bajee Rao. He escaped and joined a hody of freehooters; but being recaptured, was trampled to death by an elephant in the city of Poona. Jeswunt Rao sought refuge at Nagpoor with Ragojec Bhonslay of Berar. His confidence was betrayed; and through the intrigues of Sindia and the peishwa, he also was made a captire, but succeeded in cluding his guard, and reaching Candeish about a year and a-half after the death of Mulhar Rab. Resolved to make an effort to rescue the possessions of his family from the hands of Sindia, he took the name of assertor of the rights of Kundec Rao, the infant son of Mulhar Rao, then a prisoner at Poona, and assembled a heterogeneous force of Pindarries, Bheels, Afghans, Mahrattas, and Rajpoots. of Ameer Khan, a Mohammedan adventurer, less daring and reckless, but quite as unprincipled as himself, on whom he subsequently conferred the title of nabob. terrible series of hostilities ensued between Sindia and Holcar. From the appearance Malcolm's Central India, i., 189.

they emphatically designate "the time of trouble." The trained battalions of Sindia were defeated, and his capital, Oojein, and other chief places, captured and rifled by Holcar and Ameer Khan, with a barbarity which was horribly revenged on the wretched inhabitants of Indore by the instrumentality of Sirjee Rao Ghatkay, the father-in-law of Sindia, and the prompter as well as executor of his worst actions. Between four and five thousand persons are said to have perished by the sword, or under tortures inflicted by the ferocious Pindarries, for the express gratification of their diabolical leader; and the wells within the limits of Indore were actually choked up by the hodies of females, who had rushed on death to avoid the lust and cruelty which reigned unchecked for a period of fifteen days, and ended only with the slaughter or flight of almost every citizen, and the demolition of every house. Jeswunt Rao, with Indore, lost his only means of giving regular Without attempting pay to his soldiers. disguise, he told them the actual state of the case, and bade such as chose follow his fortunes in quest of plunder. The invitation was accepted with acclamation, and Jeswunt Rao became avowedly the leader of an army of freebooters, whose worst licentiousness he directed rather than curbed, and whose turbulence he bent to his will by the habitual display of the dauntless courage which formed the distinguishing characteristic of his family, and by the coarse humour and inimitable cajolery peculiar to himself.* His declared object was the restoration of Mahratta supremacy over India by a revival of the predatory system of Sevajee; but of this there was never any reasonable prospect. Jeswunt Rao was not the man to found a state even on the most precarious basis; he was "terrible as a destroyer," but powerless to erect or consolidate dominion.

The marauding force increased daily. Sindia renounced the cause of Casee Rao (who became thenceforth a dependent on an epoch of eighteen years' duration, which his half-brother), and would have willingly purchased peace by the surrender of the infant Kundee Rao; but Holcar knew his strength, and had, besides, gone too far to recede with safety. A desperate contest took place between the two chiefs near Poona, in October, 1802, when the personal exertions of Jeswunt Rao, who had staked his all on the event, with the determination of not surviving defeat, resulted in a complete victory. By turning his own guns on the ungovernable Patans of Ameer Khan, who was quite unable to check their violence,† Holcar saved the city from indiscriminate pillage; not, however, from any motive of justice or compassion, hut only that he might be enabled to plunder it systematically and at leisure, for the payment of the arrears of his troops and the replenishment of his private coffers. After committing every description of extortion, and giving, in his own person, an example of hard-drinking, by unrestrained indulgence in his favourite liquors, cherry and raspberry brandy, he left Amrut Rao (Ragoba's adopted son) in charge of the government, and marched off to pursue his marauding avocations in Central India.

* The following anecdote indicates that, with all his vices, Jeswunt Rao was not what a modern writer designates a sham. At an early period of his career, the accidental bursting of a matchlock deprived him of the sight of an cye. When told of the irreparable injury inflicted, he exclaimed, in allusion to the Indian proverb that one-eyed people are always wicked-" I was bad enough before, but now I shall be the very Gooroo (high-priest) of rogues." He had no religious scruples, but would plunder temples and private dwellings with equal indifference. The madness in which his career ended, is regarded as the punishment of sacrilege. | i., 229.)

> The triumph of Holcar completely changed the relative position of Bajee Rao and the English. Surrounded by a select body of troops, the peishwa waited the result of the contest; and when it was decided, fled from Poona, leaving with the British resident a draft treaty for the company, requesting the permanent establishment of a subsidiary force within his dominions, and proffering in return the assignment of a certain amount of territory, and a pledge to hold no intercourse with other states, except in concert with the English. The treaty of Bassein, arranged on this basis, was concluded in 1802. It entailed the subjection of the claims of the peishwa on the Nizam, and on Anund Rao Guicowar, the chief of Baroda in Guzerat, with whom the English had recently become closely allied; their interference having been solicited in favour of the legitimate heir in a case of for action came, his schemes were lost in disputed succession. These concessions involved a beavy sacrifice of political power; but they were slight compared with those which would have been exacted by Simlia! or Holear; and Bajee Hao could scarcely fail to fall into the hands of one or other! of these leaders, if not upheld by extraneous support. Take his father, he had few personal friends, and so little deserving the name of a party at Poons, that the governorgeneral, on discovering his unpopularity, appears to have ibubted what course to pursue with regard to his reinstatement on the ยมมามนส์. The treaty had been entered upon in the belief that the majority of the jaghiredars, and the great mass of the nation, would ro-operate with the English for the restoration of the peislawa. But if his weakness or wickedness had thoroughly alienated their confidence, the case was different; and Lord Wellesby plainly declared, that "justice and wisdom would forbid any l attempt to impose upon the Mahrattas a ruler whose resturation to authority was adverse to every class of his subjects."

† Ameer Khan had little personal courage. After the battle of Poona he came to Jeswunt Rao, who was tying up his wounds, and boasted of good for-tune in escaping unhurt; "for, see!" he said, point-ing to the feather mounted in silver, which adorned his borse's head, "my khuljee has been broken by a cannon-ball," "Well, you are a fortunate fellow," retorted the Mahratta, with a burst of incredulous laughter; "for I observe the shot has left the ears of your steed uninjured, though the wounded ornament stood betwixt them." — (Central India,

In the absence of any general manifestation of disaffection, Bajee Rao was escorted by an English force to the capital from whence he had fled with so little ecremony. Ament Rao retired on learning his approach, and eventually became a state pensioner, resident at Benarcs. Tranquillity seemed restored. There could be no doubt that Holear, Simlia, and Ragojce Bhouslay of Berar, would all feel mortified by a treaty which gave the English that very ascendancy in the conneils of Poona they, or at least Sindia and Holear, imlividually coveted. Still Lond Wellesley considered that their mutual deep-rooted enmity would prevent a coalition for so desperate an object as war with the English. Perhaps the result would have realised these anticipations had Bajee Rao been true to his engagements; instead of which, he behaved with accustomed duplicity, and corresponded with both Sindia and Ragojee Bhonslay, to whom he represented his recent voluntary agreement as wholly compulsory, and endeavoured to incite them to hostilities, trusting to the chapter of aecidents for the improvement of his own position. Yet, when the moment

The day after the taking of Poona, Col. Close, the British resident, was sent for by Holcar, whom he found in a small tent ankle-deep in mud, with a terms with the English, and, with reluctance, perspear wound in the body and a sabre-cut in the mitted the withdrawal of the resident, after which head; which last he had received from an artillery-timidity and indecision: he would not trust others; he could not trust himself.

Holear had heretofore expressly disavowed any unfriendly feeling towards the English :* and they would willingly have mediated hetween him and the peishwa, had the ranrorons mimosity of the latter suffered them to enter upon the negotiation. Sindia courted the co-operation of Holear through the instrumentality of Ragojee Bhonslay, and went so far as to surrender the child Kundee Rao, and acknowledge Mulhar Rao as the representative of the Holear family, surrendering to him their territories in Malwa, aml recognising his various claims throughout Hindoostan: Despite these concessions, the robber-chief hung back; and when pressed by the confederates to unite his army with theirs in the Deccan, with a view to making war upon the E. I. Cy., he asked who was to take care of Northern India? and withdrew to pillage the defenceless provinces of friend and foc.

The gathering storm did not escape the observation of the governor-general. Hostile preparations were commenced in every part of British India, and a declaration of his intentions demanded from Sindia; who replied curtly, yet candidly, that he could not give any until after an approaching interview with the Bhonslay; but would then inform the resident "whether it would be peace or war." This pledge was not redeemed; the meeting took place, and was followed by vague and general professions of good-will to the British government, mingled with complaints against the peishwa for an undue assumption of authority in signing the treaty of Bassein. The civil expressions of the chiefs ill accorded with the hostile and menacing attitude occupied by their armies on the frontiers of Oude. Major-general Wellesley, to whom his brother had delegated full powers, political as well as military, either for negotiation or war, brought matters to an issue with characteristic frankness, by proposing as a test of the amicable intentions of the two chiefs, that they should respectively withdraw their forces, pledging himself to do the same on the part of the English. The offer being rejected, the British resident was with-

man while leading a charge on the guns of the enemy. He expressed a strong wish to be on good

for an appeal to arms.

MAHRATTA WAR.—The governor-general well knew that the finances of his employers were in no condition to endure the drain of protracted warfare, and he resolved to follow out the policy so brilliantly successful in the Mysoor campaign, of bringing the whole force of British India to bear on the enemy; not, however, by concentration on a single point, but by attacking their territories in every quarter at the same time.

The army, by his exertions, was raised to The troops in the nearly 50,000 men. Deccan and Guzerat numbered 35,600, of whom 16,850 formed the advanced force under General Wellesley; in Hindoostan, 10,500 men were under the command of General (afterwards Lord) Lake; 3,500 were assembled at Allahabad to act on the side of Bundelcund; and 5,216 were destined The armies for the invasion of Cuttack. of Sindia and Ragojee were estimated at about 100,000 men, of whom half were cavalry; and 30,000 regular infantry and cavalry, commanded by Europeans, chiefly French, under M. Perron, the successor of Himmut Bahadur, an influ-De Boigne. ential Mahratta chief of Bundelcund,* sided with the English against the rajah, Shumsheer Bahadur. The campaign opened by the conquest, or rather occupation, of Ahmednuggur, the ancient capital of the Ahmed Shahi dynasty, on the 1st of August, 1803. The army under Majorgeneral Wellesley, hy whom it was accom-The army under Majorplished, after much marching and countermarching, fought the famous hattle of Assaye, so named from a fortified village (near the junction of the Kailna and Juah rivers, 261 miles north-west of Hydrabad), before which the confederates had encamped 21st August, 1803. They numbered 50,000 men, and were supported by above a hundred pieces of artillery. The British counted but 4,500 men; and their leader beheld with anxiety the strength of the foe, even though, on finding the Mahrattas at length drawn up in battle array, the exulting remark re-echoed through the ranks-"They cannot escape us." While the British lines were forming, the Mahrattas opened a murderous can-drawn, and preparations made on both sides | nonade. The 74th regiment sustained heavy loss, and were charged by a hody of the enemy's horse. The 19th light dragoons drew only 360 sabres, but they received the order for a counter-charge with a glad huzza; and heing manfully seconded hy native cavalry, passed through the broken hut undismayed 74th amid the cheers of their wounded comrades, cut in, routed the opposing horse, and dashed on at the infantry and guns. The troops of the line pressed on after them, and drove the enemy into the Juah at the point of the bayonet. The victory was complete, but dearly purchased; for one-third of the conquerors lay dead or wounded at the close of this sanguinary action. Of the Mahrattas, 1,200 were slain; the bodies of the fallen were scattered around in dense masses, and ninetyeight pieces of cannon remained on the field. Ragojee Bhonslay fled at an early period of the action, and Sindia soon followed his example. The cavalry evinced little inclination to out-stay their masters; hut the infantry behaved with greater steadiness; the artillerymen stood to the last, and eight of the trained battalions of De Boigne manifested unflinching determina-When resistance became hopcless, tion. the majority surrendered.+

* The ancient Hindoo dynasty of Bundelcund, of which Chutter Sal was the last efficient representative, was overwhelmed by the Mahrattas about 1786. Shumsheer Bahadur was an illegitimate descendant of the first peishwa, Bajee Rao. Himmut Bahadur, by a not unfrequent combination, was a gosuen (religious devotee) and a soldier of fortune.—(Duff.).

In the meantime, success still more brilliant in its results had attended the army under Lake, who was himself the very model of a popular commander, as hrave and collected in the front of the battle as in a council of his own officers. The destruction of Sindia's force under Perron, the capture of Agra and Delhi, with the person of the emperor-these were the leading objects to which he was to direct operations; and they were all so perfectly fulfilled, that the governor-general declared, his most sanguine expectations having been realised, he was unexpectedly called on to furnish fresh instructions. General Lake first came in sight of the enemy's cavalry at Coel, near the fort of Alighur, whither they retired after a slight skirmish. Alighur, the ordinary residence of M. Perron, was, in his absence, hravely defended by the governor, M. Pedrons. It was well garrisoned, and surrounded by a favour of the legitimate heir in a case of disputed succession. These concessions involved a heavy sacrifice of political power; but they were slight compared with those which would have been exacted by Sindia! or Holear; and Bajee Rao could scarcely fail to fall into the hands of one or other of these leaders, if not upheld by extraneous Lake his father, he had few personal friends, and so little deserving the name of a party at Poona, that the governorgeneral, on discovering his unpopularity, appears to have doubted what course to pursue with regard to his reinstatement on the musund. The treaty had been entered! upon in the belief that the majority of the jaghiredars, and the great mass of the nation, would co-operate with the English for the restoration of the peishwa. But if his weakness or wickedness had thoroughly alumated their confidence, the case was different; and Lord Wellesley plainly declared, that "justice and wisdom would furbid any attempt to impose upon the Mahrattas a fenceless provinces of friend and foe. ruler whose restoration to authority was adverse to every class of his subjects."

† The fidelity of these mercenary troops is rendered more remarkable by the fact, that a politic proclamation, issued by the governor-general at the commencement of the war, had had the effect of inducing the British part of the European officers to quit the service of Sindia, on condition of the continuance of the pay previously received from him.

In the absence of any general manifestation of disaffection, Hajee Rao was escorted liv an English force to the capital from whence he had fled with so little ceremony. Amout Ran retired on learning his approach, and eventually became a state pensioner, resident at Henares. Tranquillity scemed restored. There could be no doubt that Holear, Sindia, and Ragojee Bhonslay of Berar, would all feel mortified by a treaty which gave the English that very ascendancy in the councils of Poona they, or at least Sindia and Holear, individually coveted. Still Lord Wellesley considered that their mintral deep-rooted enuity would prevent a coalition for so desperate an object as war with the English. Perhaps the result would have realised these anticipations had Bajee Rao been true to his engagements; instead of which, he behaved with accustomed duplicity, and corresponded with both Sindia and Ragojee Bhonslay, to whom he represented his recent voluntary agreement as wholly compulsory, and endeavoured to incite them to hostilities, trusting to the chapter of accidents for the improvement of his own position. Yet, when the moment for action came, his schemes were lost in timidity and indecision: he would not trust others; he could not trust himself.

The day after the taking of Poona, Col. Close, the British resident, was sent for by Holear, whom he found in a small tent ankle-deep in mud, with a terms with the English, and, with reluctance, perspear wound in the body and a sabre-cut in the mitted the withdrawal of the resident, after which head; which last he had received from an artillery-

Holear had heretofore expressly disavowed any unfriendly feeling towards the English;* and they would willingly have mediated between him and the peishwa, had the rancorons animosity of the latter suffered them to enter upon the negotiation. Sindia courted the co-operation of Holear through the instrumentality of Ragojee Bhonslay, and went so far as to surrender the child Kundee Rao, and acknowledge Mulhar Ilao as the representative of the Holear family, surrendering to him their territories in Malwa, and recognising his various claims throughout Hindoostan: Despite these concessions, the robber-chief hing back; and when pressed by the confederates to unite his army with theirs in the Decean, with a view to making war upon the E. I. Cy., he asked who was to take care of Northern India? and withdrew to pillage the de-

The gathering storm did not escape the observation of the governor-general. Hostile preparations were commenced in every part of British India, and a declaration of his intentions demanded from Sindia; who replied curtly, yet candidly, that he could not give any until after an approaching interview with the Bhonslay; but would then inform the resident "whether it would be peace or war." This pledge was not redeemed; the meeting took place, and was followed by vague and general professions of good-will to the British government, mingled with complaints against the peishwa for an undue assumption of authority in signing the treaty of Basseiu. The civil expressions of the chiefs ill accorded with the hostile and menneing attitude occupied by their armies on the frontiers of Oude. Major-general Wellesley, to whom his brother had delegated full powers, political as well as military, either for negotiation or war, brought matters to an issue with characteristic frankness, by proposing as a test of the amicable intentions of the two chiefs, that they should respectively withdraw their forces, pledging himself to do the same on the part of the English. The offer being rejected, the British resident was with-

man while leading a charge on the guns of the enemy. He expressed a strong wish to be on good

for an appeal to arms.

MAHRATTA WAR.—The governor-general well knew that the finances of his employers were in no condition to endure the drain of protracted warfare, and he resolved to follow out the policy so brilliantly successful in the Mysoor campaign, of bringing the whole force of British India to bear on the enemy; not, however, by concentration on a single point, but by attacking their territories in

every quarter at the same time.

The army, by his exertions, was raised to nearly 50,000 men. The troops in the Deccan and Guzerat numbered 35,600, of whom 16,850 formed the advanced force under General Wellesley; in Hindoostan, 10,500 men were under the command of General (afterwards Lord) Lake; 3,500 were assembled at Allahabad to act on the side of Bundelcund; and 5,216 were destined for the invasion of Cuttack. The armies of Sindia and Ragojee were estimated at about 100,000 men, of whom half were cavalry; and 30,000 regular infantry and cavalry, commanded by Europeans, chiefly Freuch, under M. Perron, the successor of Himmut Bahadur, an influ-De Boigne. ential Mahratta chief of Bundelcund,* sided with the English against the rajah, Shumsheer Bahadur. The campaign opened by the conquest, or rather occupation, of Ahmednuggur, the ancient capital of the Ahmed Shahi dynasty, on the 1st of The army under Major-August, 1803. general Wellesley, by whom it was accomplished, after much marching and countermarching, fought the famous battle of Assaye, so named from a fortified village (near the junction of the Kailna and Juah rivers, 261 miles north-west of Hydrabad), before which the confederates had encamped 21st August, 1803. They numbered 50,000 men, and were supported by above a hundred pieces of artillery. The British counted but 4,500 men; and their leader beheld with anxiety the strength of the foe, even though, on finding the Mahrattas at length drawn up in battle array, the exulting remark re-echoed through the ranks-"They cannot escape us." While the British lines were forming, the Mahrattas opened a murderous can-drawn, and preparations made on both sides | nonade. The 74th regiment sustained heavy loss, and were charged by a body of the enemy's horse. The 19th light dragoons drew only 360 sabres, but they received the order for a counter-charge with a glad huzza; and being manfully seconded by native cavalry, passed through the broken but undismayed 74th amid the cheers of their wounded comrades, cut in, routed the opposing horse, and dashed on at the infantry and guns. The troops of the line pressed on after them, and drove the enemy into the Juah at the point of the bayonet. The victory was complete, but dearly purchased; for one-third of the conquerors lay dead or wounded at the close of this sanguinary action. Of the Mahrattas, 1,200 were slain; the bodies of the fallen were scattered around in dense masses, and ninetyeight pieces of cannon remained on the field. Ragojee Bhonslay fled at an early period of the action, and Sindia soon followed his The cavalry evinced little incliexample. nation to out-stay their masters; but the infantry behaved with greater steadiness; the artillerymen stood to the last, and eight of the trained battalions of De Boigne manifested unflinching determina-When resistance became hopcless, tion. the majority surrendered.

* The ancient Hindoo dynasty of Bundelcund, of which Chutter Sal was the last efficient representative, was overwhelmed by the Mahrattas about 1786. Shumsheer Bahadur was an illegitimate descendant of the first peishwa, Bajee Rao. Himmut Bahadur, by a not unfrequent combination, was a gosaen (religious devotee) and a soldier of fortune.—(Duff.) | tinuance of the pay previously received from him.

In the meantime, success still more brilliant in its results had attended the army under Lake, who was himself the very model of a popular commander, as brave and collected in the front of the battle as in a council of his own officers. The destruction of Sindia's force under Perron, the capture of Agra and Delhi, with the person of the emperor-these were the leading objects to which he was to direct operations; and they were all so perfeetly fulfilled, that the governor-general declared, his most sanguine expectations having been realised, he was unexpectedly called on to furnish fresh instructions. General Lake first came in sight of the enemy's cavalry at Coel, near the fort of Alighur, whither they retired after a slight skirmish. Alighur, the ordinary residence of M. Perron, was, in his absence, bravely defended by the governor, M. Pedrons. It was well garrisoned, and surrounded by a favour of the legitimate heir in a case of disputed succession. These concessions involved a heavy sacrifice of political power; but they were slight compared with those which would have been exacted by Sindia or Holcar; and Bajee Rao could scarcely fail to fall into the hands of one or other of these leaders, if not upheld by extraneous support. Like his father, he had few personal friends, and so little deserving the name of a party at Poona, that the governorgeneral, on discovering his unpopularity, appears to have doubted what course to pursue with regard to his reinstatement on the musnud. The treaty had been entered upon in the belief that the majority of the jaghiredars, and the great mass of the nation, would co-operate with the English for the restoration of the peishwa. But if his weakness or wickedness had thoroughly alienated their confidence, the case was different; and Lord Wellesley plainly declared, that "justice and wisdom would forbid any attempt to impose upon the Mahrattas a ruler whose restoration to authority was adverse to every class of his subjects." In the absence of any general manifestation of disaffection, Bajee Rao was escorted by an English force to the capital from whence he had fled with so little ceremony. Amrut Rao retired on learning his approach, and eventually became a state pensioner, resident at Benares. Tranquillity seemed restored. There could be no doubt that Holear, Sindia, and Ragojec Bhonslay of Berar, would all feel mortified by a treaty which gave the English that very ascendancy in the councils of Poona they, or at least Sindia and Holear, individually coveted. Still Lord Wellesley considered that their mutual dccp-rooted enmity would prevent a coalition for so desperate an object as war with the English. Perhaps the result would have realised these anticipations had Bajee Rao heen true to his engagements; instead of which, he behaved with accustomed duplicity, and corresponded with both Sindia and Ragojec Bhonslay, to whom he represented his recent voluntary agreement as wholly compulsory, and endeavoured to incite them to hostilities, trusting to the chapter of accidents for the improvement of his own position. Yet, when the moment for action came, his schemes were lost in timidity and indecision: he would not trust others; he could not trust himself.

† The fidelity of these mercenary troops is rendered more remarkable by the fact, that a politic proclamation, issued by the governor-general at the commencement of the war, had had the effect of inducing the British part of the European officers to quit the service of Sindia, on condition of the con-

* The day after the taking of Poona, Col. Close, the British resident, was sent for by Holear, whom he found in a small tent ankle-deep in mud, with a he found in a small tent ankle-deep in mud, with a spear wound in the body and a sabre-cut in the head; which last he had received from an artillery-

Holcar had heretofore expressly disavowed any unfriendly feeling towards the English;* and they would willingly have mediated between him and the peishwa, had the rancorous animosity of the latter suffered them to enter upon the negotiation. Sindia courted the co-operation of Holcar through the instrumentality of Ragojee Bhonslay, and went so far as to surrender the child Kundee Rao, and acknowledge Mulhar Rao as the representative of the Holcar family, surrendering to him their territorics in Malwa, and recognising his various claims throughout Hindoostan: Despite these concessions, the robber-chief hung back; and when pressed by the confederates to unite his army with theirs in the Deccan, with a view to making war upon the E. I. Cy., he asked who was to take care of Northern India? and withdrew to pillage the defenceless provinces of friend and foe. The gathering storm did not escape the observation of the governor-general. Hostile preparations were commenced in every part of British India, and a declaration of his intentions demanded from Sindia; who replied curtly, yet candidly, that he could not give any until after an approaching interview with the Bhonslay; but would then inform the resident "whether it would be peace or war." This pledge was not redeemed; the meeting took place, and was followed by vague and general professions of good-will to the British government, mingled with complaints against the peishwa for an undue assumption of authority in signing the treaty of Bassein. The civil expressions of the chiefs ill accorded with the hostile and menacing attitude occupied by their armies on the frontiers of Oude. Major-general Wellesley, to whom his brother had delegated full powers, political as well as military, either for negotiation or war, brought : matters to an issue with characteristic frankness, by proposing as a test of the amicable intentions of the two chiefs, that they should respectively withdraw their forces, pledging himself to do the same on the part of the English. The offer being rejected, the British resident was with-man while leading a charge on the guas of the enemy. He expressed a strong wish to be on good drawn, and preparations made on both sides | nonade. The 74th regiment sustained heavy for an appeal to arms.

MAHRATTA WAR.—The governor-general well knew that the finances of his employers were in no condition to endure the drain of protracted warfare, and he resolved to follow out the policy so brilliantly successful in the Mysoor campaign, of bringing the whole force of British India to bear on the enemy; not, however, by concentration on a single! point, but by attacking their territories in every quarter at the same time.

સં

ď

1

b

Î

The army, by his exertions, was raised to nearly 50,000 men. The troops in the Deccan and Guzerat numbered 35,600, of whom 16,850 formed the advanced force under General Wellesley; in Hindoostan, 10,500 men were under the command of General (afterwards Lord) Lake; 3,500 were assembled at Allahabad to act on the side of Bundelcund; and 5,216 were destined for the invasion of Cuttack. The armies of Sindia and Ragojee were estimated at about 100,000 men, of whom half were cavalry; and 30,000 regular infantry and cavalry, commanded by Europeans, chiefly Freuch, under M. Perron, the successor of Himmut Bahadur, an influ-Dc Boigne, ential Mahratta chief of Bundelcund,* sided with the English against the rajah, Shumsheer Bahadur. The campaign opened by the conquest, or rather occupation, of Ahmednuggur, the ancient capital of the Ahmed Shahi dynasty, on the 1st of August, 1803. The army under Majorgeneral Wellesley, by whom it was accomplished, after much marching and countermarching, fought the famous battle of Assaye, so named from a fortified village (near the junction of the Kailna and Juah) rivers, 261 miles north-west of Hydrabad), before which the confederates had encamped 21st August, 1803. They numbered 50,000 men, and were supported by above a hundred pieces of artillery. The British counted but 4,500 men; and their leader beheld with anxiety the strength of the foe, even though, on finding the Mahrattas at length drawn up in battle array, the exulting remark re-echoed through the ranks-"They cannot escape us.'' While the British lines were forming, the Mahrattas opened a murderous can-

* The ancient Hindoo dynasty of Bundelcund, of which Chutter Sâl was the last efficient representa-tive, was overwhelmed by the Mahrattas about 1786. Shumsheer Bahadur was an illegitimate descendant of the first peishwa, Bajee Rao. Himmut Bahadur, by a not unfrequent combination, was a gosaen quit the service of Sindia, on condition of the co (religious devotee) and a soldier of fortune.—(Duff.)

loss, and were charged by a body of the enemy's horse. The 19th light dragoons drew only 360 sabres, but they received the order for a counter-charge with a glad huzza; and being manfully seconded by native cavalry, passed through the broken but undismayed 74th amid the cheers of their wounded comrades, cut in, routed the opposing horse, and dashed on at the infantry and guns. The troops of the line pressed on after them, and drove the enemy into the Juah at the point of the bayonet. The victory was complete, but dearly purchased; for one-third of the conquerors lay dead or wounded at the close of this sanguinary action. Of the Mahrattas, 1,200 were slain; the bodies of the fallen were scattered around in dense masses, and ninetyeight pieces of cannon remained on the field. Ragojee Bhonslay fled at an early period of the action, and Sindia soon followed his The cavalry evinced little incliexample. nation to out-stay their masters; but the infantry behaved with greater steadiness; the artillerymen stood to the last, and eight of the trained battalions of De Boigne manifested unflinching determination. When resistance became hopcless, the majority surrendered.

In the meantime, success still more brilliant in its results had attended the army under Lake, who was himself the very model of a popular commander, as brave and collected in the front of the battle as in a council of his own officers. The destruction of Sindia's force under Perron, the capture of Agra and Delhi, with the person of the emperor—these were the leading objects to which he was to direct operations; and they were all so perfectly fulfilled, that the governor-general declared, his most sanguine expectations having been realised, he was unexpectedly called on to furnish fresh instructions. General Lake first came in sight of the enemy's cavalry at Coel, near the fort of Alighur, whither they retired after a slight skirmish. Alighur, the ordinary residence of M. Perron, was, in his absence, bravely defended by the governor, M. Pedrons. It was well garrisoned, and surrounded by a regular battalious, dispatched by Sindia from the Decean to strengthen his northern army; of which there now remained but two battalious, the wreck of the Delhi troops. The total was, however, formidable; being estimated at about 9,000 foot and 5,000 horse, with a numerous and well-uppointed train of artillery. Their design was supposed to be the recovery of Delhi; but as the British advanced, the Mahrattas retreated; and Lake, fearing they would excape his vigilance, and suddenly reappear in some unleoked-for quarter, followed with his cavalry by forced marches, until, on the 1st of November, he found himself, after a night's journey of twenty-five miles, in face of an enemy in apparent confusion, but advantageously posted, and refreshed by rest. After an ineffectual and disastrons attempt at attack, the British general was compelled to withdraw his brigade out of reach of cannon-shot, and await the arrival of the infantry. The details of this portion of the action are somewhat vaguely told. 76th regiment, which was chosen to head the attack, with some native infantry,* who had closed to the front, first reached the point from which the charge was to be made, and stood alone, waiting until the remainder of the column should be formed by their comrades, whose march "had been retarded by impediments in the advance,"+ the nature of which is not stated. So galling was the fire opened by the enemy, that Lake, who conducted in person every operation of the day, and had already had one herse shot under him, resolved to lead the van to the assault, sooner than stand still and witness its destruction. At this moment his second horse fell, pierced by several halls. His son, who officiated as aide-de-camp, sprang to the ground, and had just prevailed on the general to take the racant seat, when he was struck Lake had a singularly down by a ball. affectionate nature; the fall of his child, severely if not mortally wounded, was well calculated to unnerve, or, in his own phrase, "unman" him; but he knew his duty, and loved the troops, who, he writes with unaffected modesty, "at this time wanted every assistance I could give them."; Leaving Major Lake on the field, the general rode on with his gallant band, until, on arriving within reach of the canister-shot of the foc, their ranks were so rapidly thinned as to render regular advance impracticable, and tempt the Mahratta horse to charge. But this "handful of heroes," as they were gratefully termed by Lake, himself "le brave des braves," repulsed their assailants, who withdrew to a little distance. The order to the British horse to charge in turn, was brilliantly excented by the 29th dragoous. They dashed through both lines of the opposing infantry, wheeled round upon the cavalry, and, after driving them from the field, turned the rear of the enemy's second line. The British foot failed not to take advantage of the opportunity thus The whole force had by this afforded. time arrived on the field of battle, and the issue soon ceased to be doubtful; yet the hardy veterans of Do Boigne's regiments, though deprived of almost all their experienced officers, would not surrender. About 2,000 of them were broken, surrounded and made prisoners, but the majority fell with weapons in their hands. "The gunners," writes the victorious general, "stood by their gans until killed by the bayonet: all the sepoys of the enemy behaved exceedingly well; and, if they had been commanded by French officers, the event would have been, I fear, extremely doubtful. never was in so severe a business in my life, or anything like it; and pray to God I never may he in such a situation again. * * * These fellows fought like devils, or rather heroes."§

† The fidelity of these mercenary troops is rendered more remarkable by the fact, that a politic proclamation, issued by the governor-general at the commencement of the war, had had the effect of inducing the British part of the European officers to quit the service of Sindia, on condition of the con-

Wellesley Despatches, iii., 446.

The hattle of Laswaree was in all respects memorable. It completed the overthrow of the European disciplined brigades, and gave to England undisputed mastery over Delhi and Agra, with all Sindia's districts north These advantages were of the Chumbul. gained at a heavy sacrifice of life. The English loss amounted to 172 killed and 652 wounded: that of the Mahrattas was estimated at 7,000.

The detached expeditions had likewise successfully accomplished their respective missions. All Sindia's possessions Guzerat were captured by a division of the Bombay troops under Lieutenant-colonel Woodington. Broach was taken by storm on the 29th of August; and the strong hillto praise others, barely notices his own gallant deeds or those of his snn: but he mentions, the day after the battle, that parental anxiety rendered him " totally unfit for anything." Happily, Major Lake's wound proved less severe than was at first expected. Memoir of the Campaign; by Major Thorn.

^{*} The second battalion of the 12th native infantry, and five companies of the 16th.—(Thornton, iii. 338.) † Despatch of Lake to the genernor-general.—(Wellesley Despatches, vol. iii., 443.)

[§] Idem, p. 446. General Lake, habitually so ready DIV. XI.

fort of Powanghur, which overlooked the town of Champaneer, surrendered on the 17th of September.

The seizure of Cuttack was accomplished by detachments of the Madras and Bengal forces under Lieutenant-colonel Harcourt. The Brahmins of Juggernaut placed their famous pagoda under the protection of the British on the 18th of September; and the fall of Barabuttee, the fort of Cuttack, on the 14th of October, completed the reduction of the whole province.

In the subjection of Bundelcund, Lieutenant-eolonel Powell was materially aided by Himmut Bahadur, the Hindoo leader previously mentioned, who joined the British detachment in the middle of September, with a force of about 14,000 men. The army of Shumsheer Bahadur made but feeble resistance, and on the 13th of October was driven across the river Betwa. Their chief eventually became a British stipendiary.

The concluding operations of the war were performed by the army under Majorgeneral Wellesley and Colonel Stevenson. A detachment under the latter leader took possession of Boorhanpoor on the 15th of October, and two days after marched to besiege Aseerghur, called by the natives "the key of the Deccan." The fortress surrendered on the 21st, and with it the eonquerors became masters of Sindia's Deeeani possessions, including several dependent districts in Candcish. After a short time speut in pursuing the rajah of Berar, who retreated to his own dominions, and in receiving some overtures for peace, of an unsatisfactory character, from Sindia, General Wellesley descended the Ghauts on the 25th of November, with the intention of assisting Stevenson in the projected siege of Gawilghur. The junction was effected on the 29th of August, near the plains of Argaum, where the British commander, on reconnoitring, perceived with surprise the main army of the Berar rajah, comprising infantry, eavalry, and artillery, regularly drawn up, about six miles from the spot where he had himself intended to encamp. Sindia's force, consisting of one very heavy eorps of eavalry, a body of Pindarries, and other light troops, supported those of Berar. It was late in the day, and the English were wearied with a long march under a burning sun; yet their leader thought it best to take advantage of the opportunity rarely afforded of meeting the Mahrattas in a pitched battle. Forming two lines of infantry and eavalry, Major-general Wellesley advanced to the attack. A hody of 500 foot, supposed to have been Persian mercenaries, rushed upon the 74th and 78th regiments with desperation, and were destroyed to a man. Sindia's horse charged the British sepoys, but were repulsed; after which the ranks of the enemy fell into confusion and fled, pursued by the British cavalry, assisted by auxiliary bodies of Mysoor and Mogul horse. The loss of the victors, in killed, wounded, and missing, was 346 men; that of the Mahrattas is nowhere stated, but must have been very considerable.

The siege of Gawilghur, invested on the 5th of December, involved no ordinary amount of labour and fatigue, in consequence of the difficulty of earrying the guns and stores to the point of attack. The outer fort was taken by storm on the 15th; the inner fort was escaladed by the light eompany of the 94th, headed by Captain Campbell, who opened the gates and admitted the rest of the assailants.*

The confederate chieftains had by this time become extremely solicitous for the termination of war. The rajah of Berar dispatched vakeels or envoys to the British camp the day after the battle of Arganm; but in consequence of the inveterate manœuvring and procrastination of the Mahrattas, even when really desirous of concluding a treaty, affairs were not finally arranged until the 17th of December. By the treaty of Deognam, then signed, the rajah consented to surrender the province of Cuttack, including the district of Balasore, to the company, and to relinquish to the Nizam certain revenues extorted from him on various pretences. He further pledged himself to submit all differences which might arise between him and the Nizam or the peishwa to British arbitration, and promised to receive into his service no European or American subject of any state at war with the English, nor even any Englishman, without the express sanction of the governor-general.

Sindia had now no alternative but to

* The defence had been gallantly conducted by two Rajpoot leaders, whose bodies were found amid a heap of slain. Their wives and daughters were intended to have all shared their fate; but the terrible order had been imperfectly performe I with steel make peace on such terms as the conquerors thought fit to grant; and on the 30th of December he signed the treaty of Surjee Anjengaum in the British camp, by which he coiled his rights over the country between the Jumna and the Ganges (including the cities of Delhi and Agra), and to the northward of the Rajpoot principalities of Jeypoor and Joudpoor; also the forts of Ahmedabad and Broach, with their dependent districts. On the south he yielded Ahmednuggur to the peishwa, and some extensive districts to the Nizam. In return, the leading places conquered during the war, not above named, were restored to him. Shortly after this arrangement, Sindia entered the general alliance of which the British government formed the dominant portion, and agreed to receive a subsidiary British force, whose expenses were to be furnished from the revenue of the territories flinging the gauntlet at a nation whose already ceded.

The leading objects of the war had been fully carried out, in accordance with the plans of the governor-general. Among the less conspicuous but important services rendered by Lake, were the formation of alliances with the rajalis of Jeypoor, Joudpour, Boondi, and Macherry; with the Jat rajah of Bhurtpoor, the rana of Golind, and Amhajee Inglia, the unfaithful successor of Perron in the service of Sindia.* Lord Wellesley was anxious to maintain the independence of the Rajpoot principalities against Mahratta aggressions, both as a matter of justice and policy. Their territories were guaranteed to them against external enemics, with immunity from tribute; but they were not to receive European officers into their service without the sanction of the British government, and were to defray the expense of any auxiliary force required to repel invaders from their dominions.

WAR WITH HOLCAR.—Despite so many brilliant victories, attended with such substantial results, the British armics could not quit the field. During the recent hostilities, Holear had remained in Malwa, lerying enormous contributions upon the adjoining provinces. The success of the British arms seems to have convinced him of his mistake in neglecting to co-operate with chiefs of his own nation against a power whose efforts were steadily directed to the suppression of the predatory warfare by which he had reached, and could alone expect to maintain, his present position. When too late he bestirred himself to negotiate with the Rajpoots, the Bhurtpoor rajah, the Robillas, the Seiks, and finally with Simila, whom he recommended to break the humiliating treaty he had recently formed, and renew the war. But Simlia had suffered too severely in the late hostilities to provoke their repetition; and being, moreover, exasperated by the time-serving policy of Holear, t he communicated these overtures to Major Malcolm, then resident in his camp. The inimical feelings entertained by Holear, had been already manifested by the murder of three British officers in his service, on a false charge that one of them had corresponded with the commander-in-chief. Still it seemed highly improbable that he could seriously intend military achievements had become the theme of every tongue in India; and the English authorities, auxious to bring matters to a speedy and amicable conclusion, invited him to send commissioners to their eamp, to explain his views and desires. The Mahrattas are ever apt to treat conciliatory measures as symptomatic of weakness; and Holear was probably influenced by some such consideration in framing the conditions for which his vakeels were instructed to stipulate with General Lake as the terms of peace, and which included leave to colleet chout according to the custom of his ancestors, with the cession of Etawa and various other districts in the Doab and Bundelcund, formerly held by his family. Holear had not without reason blamed Sindia for too exclusive attention to the rules of European discipline, and the neglect of the guerilla warfare which Sevajee and Bajee Rao had waged successfully against Anrangzebe. This' was the weapon with which he now menaced the English, in the event of non-compliance with his demands. "Although unable," he said, "to oppose their artillery in the field, countries of many coss should be overrun, and plumlered, and burnt; Lake should not have leisure to breathe for a moment, and calamities would fall on lacs of human beings in continued war by the attacks of his army, which would overwhelm like the waves of the sea."

† Ameer Khan was netually dispatched by Holear to co-operate with Sindia; but the news of the battle of Assaye reached him on the march, and he returned as he came. - (Ameer Khan's Memoirs.)

, 14 h

[·] Sindia seized the Gohud province, and gave it in charge to Ambajee Inglia, who went over to the English. They kept Gwalior, and divided the rest of the province between the rana and Inglia.

Such a menace, from one of the most | Mokundra pass, which they resisted with reckless and powerful marauders by whom the timid peasantry of Hindoostan were ever their assailants drew off a few miles. seourged, was tantamount to a declaration of Monson, not considering his position tenwar—a formality which, it may be remarked. forms no part of Mahratta warfare. Yet it was not till further indications appeared | of his intention to commence hostilities heavy rains, reached Kotah in two marches. at the first convenient moment, that the negotiation, which Holear desired to gain giually formed of lands separated from time by protracting, was broken off, and Boondi. It remained for above a century Lord Lake and Major-general Wellesley directed to commence operations against | fell beneath the sway of Zalim Sing, a Rajhim both in the north and the south. The poot of the Jhala tribe, who governed under governor-general entered on this new war the name of regent-it would appear, with with unaffected reluctance. menced, it could not be arrested by an accommodation such as that entered into a difficult part with extraordinary ability, with Sindia; for a predatory power must, he thought, be completely neutralised, in justice to the peaceable subjects of more the vessel of state, that while every other civilised governments. It was important to Rappoot principality tottered under the secure the cordial co-operation of the subsidiary and allied states against the common foe; and this was effected by the declaration | of Lord Wellesley-that all territory conquered from Holear should be divided among | passed over, as if strengthened by the trial, the British auxiliaries without reserve.

The opening of the campaign was dis-Major-general Wellesley could not advance in consequence of a famine in the never-ceasing disputes of neighbourwhich prevailed in the Decean. after storming the fort of Rampoora (16th pretence of mediation. His deep duplicity May, 1804), was compelled to withdraw the [did not preserve him from incurring strong main army into cantonments for the rainy season, leaving Colonel Monson, with five sepoy battalions and 3,000 irregular horse, to watch the movements of the foc. The proceedings of this commander were most unfortunate. Though "brave as a liou," he wanted decision of purpose and confidence in the native troops. After making an ill-advised entrance into the dominions of the enemy, he became alarmed at the reported approach of Holear in person; and [fearing the probable failure of supplies before the British could join the Guzerat force under Colonel Murray, he retreated) forthwith. A retrograde movement on the part of British troops was proverbially more weary and half-famished troops, demanded hazardons in native warfare than the boldest from the regent nothing less than their adadvance. Holear eagerly followed, attacked mission into the city, which could not be and defeated the irregular cavalry left in granted without creating great confusion the rear to forward intelligence of his pro- and insuring the deadly sengrance of the ceedings, and summoned the main body to Mahrattas. To the English, Zahm Sing was surrender. This being indignantly refused, | yet more unwilling to give offence. Their furious and reiterated onsets were made paramount authority was being daily and by him on the repoy battalions at the mented and consolidated; nor could be steadiness and success, till, at evening, able, continued the retreat; the native troops behaved admirably, and, though harassed by the enemy, and exposed to Kotah was a Rajpoot principality, oriand a-half of secondary importance, until it Once com- the full consent of the rightful prince or rana, Omeida Sing. Zalim Sing played and by dint of consummate art, perfect self-control, and unfailing energy, so steered effects of the furious attacks or undermining intrigues of the encroaching Mahrattas, Boondi, though ever first to bend to the storm, raised her head as soon as it had Excessive lumility and moderation formed the disguise beneath which the regent attained the position of a general arbitrator Lake, ling governments, which he fostered under personal hostility; and Tod, after narrating no less than eighteen attempts at his assassination, represents him as sleeping in an iron eage for security. At the time at which we have now arrived, "the Nestor of India" was about sixty-five years of age. His position was one of peculiar difficulty. To keep peace with Holear he had paid dearly, both in money and character, having stooped to form an intimate alliance with Ameer Khan as a means of averting the seourge of indiscriminate plander from the fertile fields of Boonili, great part of which were cultivated for his exclusive benefit; yet Colonel Monson, on his arrival with the !

doubt that Kotah, like other native princi- a rapid movement, succeeded in investing palities, would eventually do well to find in Delhi. a dependent alliance on the dominant power, an alternative from complete extinction.* Even now, he was ready to make common! cause with the retreating and dispirited troops, or to do anything for their succour, to the extent of his ability, outside the walls of Kotah; but the pertinacity of Monson in demanding admittance was unavailing, and the detachment marched on to Rampoora, through an inundated country barely traversable for the troops, and impracticable for cannon and stores, which were consequently destroyed and abandoned. A reinforcement sent with supplies by General Lake, gave temporary relief to the harassed soldiers, but could not remedy the incapacity of their commander; and after many more struggles and reverses,† attended with a complete loss of baggage on the road to Agra, the confusion of one very dark night brought matters to a climax; the troops fairly broke and fled in separate parties to the city, where the majority of the fugitives who escaped the pursuing cavalry, found an asylum on the 31st of July, 1804.

These proceedings increased the rabble force of Holcar tenfold. Adventurers and plunderers of all descriptions (including the wreck of the armies of Sindia and the Bhonslay) flocked to his standard; and after making the regent of Kotah pay a fine of ten lacs for his partial assistance of the in the field, his strongholds, in various English, the Mahratta chief invaded their territories, at the head of an immense army,§ in the character of a conqueror. At his approach the British troops ahandoned Muttra with its stores; but the fort was reoccupied by a detachment sent hy General Lake, who had marched hastily from Campore, in hopes of bringing the enemy to action. He was, however, completely outwitted by Holcar, who occupied the attention of the British general by manœuvring his cavalry; while his infantry, by

* When Colonel Tod was employed in forming an alliance between the supreme government and the Kotah principality, he took an opportunity of assuring Zalim Sing that the English desired no more territory. The old politician smiled, as he answered-"I believe you think so; but the time will come when there will be but one sicca (stamp of sovereignty on coin) throughout India. You stepped in at a lucky time; the pfoot (a sort of melon, which bursts asunder when fully matured) was ripe, and you had only to take it bit by bit. It was not your power so much as our disunion that made you sovereigns, and will keep you so."-(Rajast'han, i., 766.)

The city, ten miles in circumference, had but a ruined wall, with scarcely more than 800 sepoys, for its defence: nevertheless, these troops, headed by Lieutenantcolonels Ochterlony and Burn, after nine days' operations, compelled a force of 20,000 men to raise the siege. Holcar, with his cavalry, withdrew to the Doab, whither he was followed by Lake, who, after a long pursuit, by marching fifty-three miles in twentyfour hours, eventually came up with the enemy on the 17th of November, under the walls of Furruckabad. The Indian horse never could stand a charge in the field; their leader knew this, and was himself the first to fly, followed by his panicstruck adherents, of whom 3,000 were cut to pieces by the victors, and the rest escaped only by the superior swiftness of their horses. The Mahratta chief made his way to Deeg, a strong fort belonging to Runjeet Sing of Bhurtpoor, a Jat leader, who, after the defeat of the detachment under Monson, had quitted the English, and joined the opposite interest.

The determined proceedings of Lake induced the confederate chiefs to evacuate Deeg and retreat to Bhurtpoor, a city not very formidable in appearance, of six to eight miles in circumference, defended by a high mud wall, and a broad ditch not easily fordable. But the rajah was skilful and desperate. Holcar had little to boast of; for while himself heading a defeated army quarters, had been reduced by the English; and a detachment of troops from Guzerat had occupied Indore, and were preparing to intercept his retreat. Still he was a marauder by profession, whose kingdom was in his saddle; whereas the Jat rajah truly declared he had no home but in his castleevery hope was bound up in its hattlements. The defence was most determined; and even when a practicable breach had been effected, attempts to take the place by storm were neutralised by the ready inven-

When the younger European officers were heartsick, and well-nigh sinking with fatigue, the sepoys were frequently heard bidding them be of good cheer; for they would carry them safely to Agra. - (Duff.) Zalim Sing and Holcar (both one-eyed men) met in boats on the Chumbul, each fearing treachery. According to Malcolm, Holcar's army comprised 92,000 men (66,000 cavalry, 7,000 artillery, 19,000 infantry), with 190 guns.—(Central India, i., 238.)

|| The sepoys were on duty day and night. To keep up their spirits under incessant fatigue, Orbier lony had sweetmeats served out, and promised the= half a month's pay when the enemy was repulsed

tion of the besieged. Stockades and bulwarks rose as if by magic to blockade the ley had signified to the Court of Directors breach; the most was rendered unfordable by dams; and, during the attack, pots filled with combustibles, and burning cotton-bales steeped in oil, were flung upon the heads of the assailants. The British were four times repulsed, with a total loss of 3,203 men in killed and wounded; nor did even their highly-prized military reputation escape unimpaired. On one occasion, the famous 76th, in conjunction with the 75th, refused to follow their officers after the 12th Bengal sepoys had planted the colours on the top of the rampart. The bitter reproaches of their general recalled them to a sense of duty, and, overpowered with shame, they entreated to be led to a last attack, in which they displayed much desperate but unavailing courage. The operations of the siege were for a time intermitted to procure further reinforcements, The rajal, convinced that his destruction, however temporarily retarded, was but a question of time, offered twenty lacs of rupces, with other concessions, as the price of peace, and the proposal was accepted, although at the risk of leaving on the minds of the natives a of Fort William was his favourite project. dangerous example of successful resistance. The advanced state of the season, the fear of the hot winds, together with the me-naeing attitude of Sindia, then under the influence of his father-in-law, the notorious Shirjee Rao Ghatgay, were sufficient reasons for refraining from engaging the flower of the British army, at a critical period, in a contest with a desperate man, who, if mildly treated, might be neutralised at The son of the rajal of Bhartpoor was therefore taken as a hostage for the fidelity of his father, and the restoration of the fortress of Deeg held forth as its reward. The force of Holear had been reduced by descrition, more than by actual loss, to less than a fourth of its number at the opening of the campaign. The separate treaty entered into by the rajali of Blurtpoor left him no hope but in the co-operation of Sindia, who affected to be desirous of mediating with the British government on his behalf. The Despite the obvious policy, as well as juspower of both chiefs was, however, broken, tice, of this measure, as the only means of and few obstacles remained towards a preventing Indian commerce from todaing its general pacification, on terms very advan- way to Europe by more objectionable chantageous to the English; when their whole neis, "the shapping interest," then preatly policy was abruptly changed by the passing predominant in the comerle of the comof the office of governor-general from the pany, violently opposed any alteration which hands of the Marquis Wellesley into those should trench on their mor gody, and even of Lord Cornwallis, in 1805.

As early as January, 1802, Lord Welleshis desire of quitting India. The motives for the proffered resignation were various, They included several acts, on the part of the directory, which the marquis deemed derogatory to the reputation of himself and his brothers, as well as to that of his stanch coadjutor, Lord Clive, the governor of Madras; but the chief ground of complaint was the disfavour shown to his favourite selieme of founding a college at Calcutta, for the express instruction of young civilians in the description of knowledge absolutely requisite for the fulfilment of their allotted duties. The glaring ignorance of native languages evinced by European rulers, had long been a manifest hindranee to the good government of the people of India, as well as a bar to the kindly intercourse which might otherwise have subsisted. It was this primary defect which the marquis hoped to rectify, and at the same time to infuse into the youths of the service something of the esprit de corps, which he remembered with such vivid pleasure to have existed at Eton. The College The company did not deny the want of systematic instruction, which was daily more painfully felt; but they could not be brought to consent to the expenditure which Lord Wellesley deemed absolutely needful to fulfil the double object of educating Europeans and affording encouragement to native tulent. The Board of Control supported the views of Lord Wellesley; but the project was, after all, but very imperfeetly carried out, so far as the Indian population was concerned: for the instruction . of civilians destined to serve the P. I. Cy., 1 a college (Haileybury) was founded in Eng. land a few years later. Another cause which rendered the governor-general unpopular with his employers, was his deliber. rate and avowed opinion in favour of the extension of trade with England to Indiabuilt shipping, instead of confining it solely to the chartered vessels of the E. I. Cr. I trived, in many ways, to realer lord Wellesley sensible of their unfriendly feelings. Nevertheless, his proffered resignation was deprecated by an entreaty to remain at least another year, to settle the newly-acquired territories, and concert with the home authorities the foundation of an efficient system for the liquidation of the Indian The renewal of war with the Mahrattas, despite the brilliant success with which it was attended, could not but involve an increase of immediate expenditure, though compensated by a more than proportionate augmentation of territory. But the investments were impeded; and a failure in the annual supplies was ill borne by the company, however advantageous the promise of ulterior advantages; consequently, a clamour arose against the marquis as a war-governor, which decided his recall at the time when all material obstacles were removed, and his whole energies directed towards the attainment of a solid and durable peace. He had been sent out for the express purpose of eradicating French influence, an object which he had completely accomplished, though, of necessity, at the cost of much war and more diplomacy.*

The Wellesley administration—from 1798 to 1805—formed a new era in the annals of the E. I. Cy. Principles of honour and public spirit were engrafted which bore much fruit in after days; and many a friendless cadet of the civil and military service found in rapid promotion the direct reward of talent and integrity. Nay, more; there are honoured veterans still with us, who, after the lapse of half a century, delight to attribute their success to the generous encouragement or kindly warnings of the good and gifted Marquis Wellesley.+

Perfect toleration was his leading rule; nevertheless, he did not hesitate to interfere for the suppression of such heathen customs as were manifestly incompatible with the spirit of a Christian government; such as the frightful amount of infanticide annually

* Into his minor measures, especially the restrictions placed on the liberty of the press, it is not practicable to enter: the motives for some of them were purely political—to check the conveyance of dangerous information, or lying rumours to foreign states; while the edict forbidding the publication of newspapers on Sundays, had the double object of reverence for the sabbath and a desire to show the nations, that not only the missionaries, but the Europeans in general had a religion—a fact which might well have been doubted.

† The rising talent of the civil service was called out in a peculiar manner by Lord Wellesley. The committed at the mouth of the Ganges. Neither was he withheld, by timid or sectarian views, from affording liberal encouragement to the able and zcalous men (Buchanan and Carey, for instance) who had devoted themselves to the office of To all around him Christian missionaries. engaged in the cause of religion or good government, he extended cordial sympathy as fellow-workers; and if a shadow of blame can be cast on his ever-discriminating praise, it would be that of having been sometimes too liberally bestowed. But the full measure of love and confidence he gave so freely, was returned into his own bosom. Military and civil officials, of all ranks and classes-from the Earl of Elgin, at Constantinople, and Lord Clive, at Madras, to the humblest clerk-vied in affording the fullest and most correct information for the use of the governor-general; and the merchants and bankers seconded his measures in the most effective manner by furnishing government loans on the lowest possible At the close of the administration of Sir John Shore, it had been difficult to raise money on usurious interest; but the Marquis Wellesley, on the evc of a hazardous war, found men who could appreciate the policy of his measures, and make them practicable, even at considerable pecuniary risk.;

The general feeling in India was, unhappily, not appreciated or shared in England. The marquis returned, after an arduous and brilliantly successful administration, to find the uncertain tide of popular feeling turned against him. The British public were well acquainted with the aggressive and grasping policy of Hastings, and the manner in which he had made the weakness or wickedness of native princes conduce to the aggrandisement of his employers or his own personal interest. It was a very natural conclusion to be arrived at by persons ignorant of the general disorganisation of India, that a governor who had added hun-

guished themselves in their examinations at the college of Fort William, were placed in the secretary's office of the governor-general, and educated under his immediate care for the respective departments, for the duties of which they were best fitted. Of those thus brought forward, three (Metcalfe, Adams, and Butterworth Bayley) became acting governors-general; and the majority attained high positions in India and in England.

† Mr. (afterwards Sir Charles) Forbes, the head of the well-known firm at Bombay, was the chief of those who, by taking up government paper at par, as well as furnishing supplies, restored the confidence of the youths of the three presidencies, who had distin- wealthy natives in the stability of the E.I.Cy.

streds of miles and thousands of subjects to an empire, which Hastings had been stigmatised as an usurper and oppressor for increasing by units and tens, must have been guilty of the same sins in an aggrasated degree. Besides, the augmentation of territory and population had been effected in the teeth of a parliamentary probibition of the most decided character. The oldest and ablest Indian politicians sainly strong to show the utter impracticability of neutrality, and argued that lingland, now the dominant power, rould not relinquish her high position in measure, but must, of necessity, abandon territorial correspots and commercial advantage in almost equal degree. The company were smarting beneath the expenses of a war, which a little patience would have brought to the most satisfactory conclusion, by the prostration of the predatory power, which was equally opposed? to all regular governments, foreign or native. But not an immediate compromise was the order of the day; the nithdrawal of the lauce of their servants in India. He died beplundering Mahrattas from the company's loved and honoured, aged eighty-three; havterritories was a relief to be obtained upon l any terms, even by a direct violation of the pledge voluntarily given to the Itajpoot states | beside other distinguished positions. This to maintain their independence against their is not the place to tell of the efficient manmaranding foca. What matter if all Rajast'han were overrun by these eastern Goths, The company's investments would go on meanwhile; and when Sindia and Holear had quite exhausted all outside the magic circle, it would be time enough to devise some other sop wherewith to engage them. This reliash policy, disguised by the few who understood the real state of the case by much abstract reasoning regarding the admitted justice of non-interference in general, deceived many good men and raised al strong, though short-lived clamonr, against the champion of the opposite system. The feeling of certain leaders in the directory, joined with party politics of a very discreditable description in the ministry, found a channel in the person of a ci-derant trader named Paull, who, having accumulated a large fortune in India, came to England and entered parliament in the character of impeacher of the Marquis Wellesley, to tained or abandoned-but whatever its fate, whom, by his own account, he owed heavy obligations, and entertained, in common memory of the greatest statesman by whom with the generality of Anglo-Indians, it was ever administered are imperisbable."+ "the highest respect." The leading accusations were aggressions on native states: extravagance and disregard of home antho having a peep at one's own funeral." rities.—at neculation or venality, not even 7 Thornton's India, iii., 575. rities,-at peculation or venality, not even calumny dared lint. The first charge regarding Onde was thrown out by the House of Commons, and the accuser died by his own hand, prompted by vexation or remorse. Lord Folkstone strove to carry on the impeachment by moving a series of condemnatory resolutions, which were negatived by a majority of 182 to 31, and followed by a general vote of approbation. Thus ended, in May, 1809, a persecution which cost the noble marquis £30,000, and excluded him from office during its continuance; for, with rare delicacy, he refused repeated solicitations to re-enter the service of the Crown until the pending question should be satisfactorily settled. He lived to see the general recognition of the wisdom of his policy: and on the publication of his Despatches in 1831-5, the L. I. Cy. made the amende honorable, by the unusual procedure of the erection of his statue in the E. I. House,* a grant of £20,000, and the circulation of his Despatches for the instruction and guiding twice filled the office of viceroy of Ireland -been secretary of state for foreign affairs; ner in which the illustrious brothers worked together for the defeat of the national foe, Napoleon: here we have to do with the marquis as an Indian governor; in that character let the pen of the historian of the E. I. Cy. speak his merits. Marquis Wellesley was ambitious; but his ambition sought gratification not in mere personal aggrandisement, but in connecting his own fame with that of the land to which he belonged, and of the government which he administered, -in the diffusion of sound and liberal knowledge, and the extension of the means of happiness among millions of men who knew not his person, and some of them searcely his name. That name is, however, stamped for ever on their history. The British government in India may pass away-its duration, as far as human means are concerned, will depend on the degree in which the policy of the Marquis Wellesley is mainor the length of its existence, the name and

[·] Lord Wellesley remarked, that to witness this compliment (rarely paid until after death), was "like

SECOND ADMINISTRATION OF LORD CORN-WALLIS.—The new governor arrived at Fort William in July, 1805, and immediately assumed the reins of office. The interval of thirteen years between his resignation and resumption of authority in India, had told heavily on his strength of mind as well as of body, and the once indefatigable commander-in-chief returned to the seene of his former successes a worn and weary man, fast sinking to the grave under the infliction of chronic dysentery. Yet the English authorities, in accordance with popular opinion, declared him to be the only man fit to curb and limit the too extensive dominion obtained by the late administration iu conjunction with the gallant Lake, whose services, though their effects were denounced. had been acknowledged by a pecrage.

Lord Cornwallis had given proof of moderation hy suffering Tippoo to purchase peace with a third of his revenues, and had rather relaxed than straitened the connexion of the E. I. Cy. with various native states. Despite the unsatisfactory results of his arrangements, and still more so of those formed by Sir John Shore, the Directory and Board of tiate the favour of Sindia-"an act," writes Control agreed in reverting to the nonintervention system, and urged the arduous office of effecting an immediate and total change of policy upon the ex-governorgeneral with so much rehemence, that he, from self-denying but mistaken views of duty, would not suffer failing health to excuse the non-fulfilment of what, with strange infatuation, was pressed on him as a public duty. It is not easy to understand the process of reasoning by which Lord Cornwallis was led to adopt such extreme opinions regarding the measures to be taken towards Sindia and Holcar. He had warmly approved the arrangements of the Marquis Wellesley regarding the occupation of Seringapatam and the complete suppression of the usurping dynasty; yet, now the arrogant and aggressive Sindia, and the predatory Holcar were to be conciliated, not simply by the surrender of a succession of dearly-purchased conquests, but by the renunciation of alliance with the Rajpoot and other states, who had taken part with the British forces against the marauding Mahrattas in the late crisis.

Sindia had suffered, if not caused, the English residency attached to his camp to be attacked and plundered by a body of Pindarries, and had himself detained Mr. days earlier, they might perhaps have been

manded for this outrage: and the governorgeneral, in his impatient desire to conclude a peace, would even have waived insisting upon the release of the resident; but from this last degrading concession the English were happily saved by the intervention of Lord Lake. Nothing could exceed the indignation of the brave and honest general on learning the nature of the proposed treaty, which he felt to he based on the unworthy principle of conciliating the strong at the expense of the weak. territories conquered from Holear had been distinctly promised to be divided among the allies of England; instead of which, they were all to he restored to the defeated chief: and the breach of faith thus committed towards the only power able to resent it, was to be repaired at the expense of the powerless rana of Gohud, who had made over Gwalior to the English on being enrolled among the list of subsidiary princes. He was now to be reduced to the condition of a mere stipendiary, dependent on his hereditary foe for subsistence; for all Gohud, including Gwalior, was to be given to propithe governor-general, "entirely gratuitous on our part." Equally so was the renunciation of our connexion with the numerous rajalis, zemindars, jaghiredars, and other chiefs on the further side of the Jumna, for whose protection the British faith had been solemnly pledged. Lord Lake, who had been mainly instrumental in forming the majority of these alliances, and had, in his capacity of commander-in-chief, received material assistance from several of the parties concerned, addressed an earnest remonstrance to the governor-general against the proposed repudiation, declaring that the weaker allied princes never could be induced by any argument or temporary advantage to renounce the promised support of the E. I. Cy., and that the bare proposition would be viewed "as a prelude to their being sacrificed to the object of obtaining a peace with the Malirattas." This communication bore date the day following that on which Lord Cornwallis expired. For some time before his death, he passed the morning hours in a state of weakness amounting to insensibility; but the evening usually brought him sufficient strength to hear despatches read, and even to dictate replies. Had the energetic appeal and arguments of Lake been sent a few Jenkins; yet no reparation was to be de- instrumental in delaying and modifying the Little difference of opinion now exists regarding the accommodation effected with the Mahrattas. The non-interrention policy was soon abandoned; but its results justify the declaration of Grant Duff, that the measures of Sir George Barlow were no less short-sighted and contracted than selfish and indiscriminating. His provisional administration terminated in July, 1807,* its concluding event being an alarming mutiny among the native troops in the Carnatic. The immediate cause was the enforcement of certain frivolous changes of dress, together with other orders trivial in character, but involving a needless interference with the manners and enstoms of the soldiery, which had been introduced without the knowledge of Lord William Bentinek, the successor of Lord Clive in the government of Madras. "The new regulations required the scroys to appear on parade with their chins clean shaved, and the hair on the upper lip cut abroad, but excited little attention in the after the same pattern, and never to wear the distinguishing mark of easte, or their carrings when in uniform. A turban of

These ill-advised changes might possibly have been accomplished without occasioning any serious disturbance, had a cordial understanding subsisted between the British and I the native officers. But this was not the ease; and the consequence of the alienation existing between them was, that the sons of Tippoo Sultan, then resident at Vellore, took advantage of the princely income and unusual degree of liberty allowed them as state prisoners, to assemble a large band of adherents, who made it their business to inspire the soldiery with aversion to their foreign masters, on the ground that the newly-devised turban, and its concomitants, though ostensibly ordered for the sake of convenience and unanimity, were really the tokens and forerunners of a foreible conversion to Christianity. The assertion was an utter absurdity. The Hindoos themselves, whose erced makes no provision for con-knighthood of the Order of the Bath, quitted India in 1805, ill-pleased with the manner in which the services of his brother and himself were received.

Mill's History of British India terminates with the peace with the Mahrattas. In an able, but prejudiced, and without the comments of Prof. Wilson, misleading summary of the commercial results of the Wolfelm administration the receivers are shown the Wellesley administration, the revenues are shown to have been raised from £8,059,880, in 1805-6, to £15,403,409; but the war expenditure, with the interest on the increased debt, which had been tripled, verts, were searcely more devoid of proselytising zeal than the English had shown themselves, despite the opposite tendency of n religion which directs its professors "to preach the gospel to all nations." military officers had, as a body (for there were exceptions), no need to defend themselves against any imputation of over-anxiety to manifest the excellencies of their faith in their lives and conversation, or by any encouragement of missionary labours. Christianity the natives in the vicinity of Vellore knew nothing, and were consequently ready to believe just anything, except that its divine Founder had enjoined on all his disciples a code so fraught with lumility, clustity, and brotherly kindness, that if observed it must infallibly render Christians a blessing to every state, whether as rulers or as subjects.

Rumours of the growing disaffection were ears of those most concerned. Unmistakable symptoms of mutiny appeared, and were foreibly t put down, until, on the 10th a new pattern was also ordered for the of July, 1806, the European part of the sepoys."†

Vellore garrison were uttacked by their native colleagues, and Colonel Fancourt and 112 Europeans had perished or been mortally wounded, before Colonel Gillespie, at the head of a body of dragoous, terminated a contest which involved the destruction of about 350 of the mutineers, and the imprisonment of 500 more. Lord William Bentinek became the sacrifice of measures adopted without his sanction, and was reealled, together with the commander-in-chief, Sir John Cradoek. The obnoxious orders were repealed, the allowances of the sons of Tippoo were diminished, their place of imprisonment changed from Vellore to Bengal; and, by slow degrees, the panie wore off. The captive insurgents were gradually set at liberty; the cheerful obedience of the men, and their customary fidelity to those whose salt they ate, returned; and the British officers "ceased to sleep with pistols under their pillows."§ > caused the annual charges to exceed the receipts by above two million. This was a temporary addition, but the revenues of the conquered territories were a permanent gain, viewed as so certain, that Barlow held forth the prospect of a million sterling as the annual surplus, to follow immediately on the restora-† Auber's India, ii., 432. tion of peace.

> The severe coercion employed may be conjectured from the fact that 900 lashes each were inflicted upon two grenadiers for refusing to wear the "hat-shaped" turban. § Bentinck's Memorial.

Auministration of Lord Minto-1805 to 1813.—The new governor-general (formerly Sir Gilhert Elliot) came to India strongly prepossessed in favour of a neutral policy, but was speedily compelled to modify his views.

Holear, on his return to Malwa, found occupation in quelling the disturbances arising from the non-payment of arrears to his turbulent followers, who made use of the boy, Kundec Rao, to intimidate his uncle into the liquidation of their claims. The object heing accomplished, the child became, as he had himself predicted, the victim of the wrath of Jeswant Rao; and Casee Rao died suddenly soon after, having heen likewise, it was supposed, assassinated to prevent the possibility of the rights of nuv legitimate descendant of Tuknice being brought into collision with those of Jeswunt Rao. These and other atrocities were the forerunners of madness, which appeared in temporary paroxysms, with intervals of partial sanity, employed by Jesseuut in making extensive military preparations, especially in easting cannon, a work which he superintended night and day, using stimulants to supply the place of food and rest. It soon became necessary to confine him; and twenty to thirty men with difficulty succeeded in binding the despot fast with ropes, like a wild His fierce struggles gradually subsided into speechless fatuity, and, at the expiration of three years, during the greater part of which he was fed like an infant with milk, the dreaded freebooter died a miscrable idiot in his own camp, on the 20th of October, 1811.* Before his insanity, Holear had taken advantage of the withdrawal of British protection to ravage and pillage the states of Rajast'han, especially Jeypoor or Amber, under the old pretext of exacting arrears of chout. quarrels of the Rajpoot princes gave full scope for his treacherous interference. hand of Crishna Kumari, the high-born daughter of the rana of Oodipoor, was an object of dispute between Juggut Sing of Jeypoor, and Maun Sing of Joudpoor. Holcar was bought off by Juggut Sing, but this arrangement did not prevent him from suffering his general, Ameer Khan, to hire his services to the opposite party. The chief commenced his task by ridding the rajah of Joudpoor of a rebellious feudatory, named

· Holcar was of middle height, remarkably strong and active. A small but handsome mausoleum was erected to his memory near Rampoora, and his favou-rite horse ranged in freedom around it. Tod describes of a tea-cup.—(Rajast'han, ii., 720.)

Sevace Sing, whom he deluded, by oaths and protestations of friendship, into visiting his camp. The intended victim entered the spacious tent of the Patan with a body of friends and attendants, and was received with every demonstration of respect. Ameer Khan invented a plausible pretext for a short absence, and caused the cords of the tent to be suddenly loosened; then, taking advantage of the confusion, he ordered a sharp fire of musketry and grape to be poured indiscriminately on the whole of the crowded assembly. The massacre was comulcte; and not only the companions of the betrayed Rajpoot, but those of Ameer Khan himself, with a party of dancing-girls and musicians, were mercilessly sacrificed. rana of Oodipoor was scriously alarmed by the enmity of so unprincipled an adversary. He vainly appealed to the British government, as possessing the paramount authority in India, to interfere for the protection of their oppressed neighbour: his entreaties, like those of Zalim Sing, were disregarded, and the proud representative of the Surya race (the offspring of the sun) was compelled to fraternise with the infamous Patan adventurer by the exchange of turbans, as well as to subsidise his troops at the cost of a fourth of the revenues of the principality. This was in itself deep abasement, but worse remained behind. Amcer Khan, in conjunction with Aject Sing, a Rajpoot noble, whose memory is, for his conduct on this occasion, excerated throughout Rajast'han, succeeded in convincing the unhappy rana, that the death of his child was absolutely necessary to save the principality from destruction at the hands of the rival suitors. With his consent, poison was mixed with the food of the princess; but she ate sparingly, and its murderous purpose was not accom-The high-spirited girl, on displished. covering the design thus temporarily frus-. trated, bade her father attempt no more concealment, since, if his welfare and the safety of the state required it, she was ready to die by her own act. Accordingly, having bathed and dressed, as if for a nuptial feast, she drank off the poison. The first two draughts proved harmless, for nature revolted, and the noxious beverage was rejected; but the third time a more insidious preparation was administered, and Crishna

this animal with enthusiasm, as the very model of a Mahratin charger, with small and pointed ears, full three. He was succeeded in his titular authority by his eldest son, Akher Shah, who made some feeble attempts at the nequisition of real power, but soon renounced the futile endeavour. The exertions of the Travancore authorities in 1809, to throw off the yoke of the E. I. Cy., involved some destruction of life, but terminated in the principality becoming completely dependent on Fort St. George. The tribute exacted from Cochin was also largely increased.

The last feature was an impending rupture with the Goorkas, a tribe who had come into notice about the middle of the eighteenth century, and had gradually assumed a dominant influence over the whole of the extensive valley of Nepaul. During the second administration of Lord Cornwallis, they had completed the attainment of territory (less by violence than by fraud gratulating themselves on the easy fulfilment and corruption) which presented, on the of an unpromising task. side of the English, a frontier of 700 miles. Disputes had arisen between the Goorkas and certain chiefs, who, through the cessions made by the vizier of Onde, or other arrangements, had become British feudato-The so-called pacific policy of Lord Wellesley's successors had emboldened aggression in all quarters; and the seizure of Bhootwal (a horder district of the ancient vicerovalty of Onde) was followed by renewed invasion; until, in 1813, a new turn was given to affairs by the demand of the English anthorities for the immediate surrender of the usurped territories. Before an answer could arrive from the court of most of whom maintained their indepen-Nepaul, the reins of government passed from the hands of Lord Minto, who returned to England, where he died (June, 1814), aged sixty-five. He was an able and energetic man; and the removal of his prejudices paved the way for a similar change of feeling on the part of his countrymen.*

Moira, or Hastings' Administration, 1813 to 1823 .- Lord Moira reached Calcutta in October, and, in the following month, received the tardy reply of the Goorkalese until one of themselves, an aspiring chief, sovereign to the demand of Lord Minto for named Prithi Narayan Sah,† rajah of the sovereign to the demand of Lord Minto for the evacuation of Bhootwal and Sheoraj. It was complimentary in manner, but uncompromising in substance. There were many reasons for avoiding immediate hostilities in this quarter, and attempts were made to settle the question by amicable negotiation; but the persistance of the commissioners from Nepaul in reviving points previously settled, being at length silenced by a positive refusal to enter on such discussions, the British agent was warned to quit the frontier; and the envoys were recalled to Katmandoo, the capital of Nepaul. Lord Moira was too anxious to avert a frontier war, to give place to hasty resentment; and he addressed aremonstrance to the Nepaulese government regarding the insulting manner in which the late negotiation had been broken off. - No answer being returned to this communication, a detachment was sent from Goruckpoor to occupy the disputed lands, an object which was effected without opposition. The British troops placed the direction of affairs in the hands of native officials, and withdrew, con-The position of the northern mountaineers was but very imperfectly understood by the Calcutta functionaries, who now wielded the sceptre of the Mogul. During the palmy days of the empire, while the reins of government were held by too firm a hand for servants to appropriate to themselves the delegated sway of the sovereign, the plains at the foot of the mountains, between the river Teesta on the cast and the Sutlej on the west, had been possessed by numerous petty Hindoo rajahs, who became tributary to'the emperor, and received, in return, protection from the aggressions of the lawless hill-chiefs, dence, though some were content to own a sort of vassalage to the empire, in return for the possession of a portion of the magnificent forest of Sdl trees, and of the rich plain called the Turace, lying between them and Hindoostan. The old highland rajahs, whose families had warred with their lowland countrymen from time immemorial, held their own during the continuance and after the decline of Mohammedan power, small state of Goorka, to the north-west of Nepaul, incited by the early victories of the English in Bengal, armed and disciplined a body of troops after the European fashion, and proceeded to absorb the surrounding states, in a manner described as closely

† According to Col. Kirkpatrick, the Goorka dynasty claim descent from the ranas of Oodipoor. Hamilton states, they belong to the Magar tribe, which has but very partially yielded to Brahminism.

In 1813, an attempt to impose a house-tax occasioned great excitement in the holy city of Benares: the people practised a singularly combined, and eventually successful system, of passive resistance.

resembling that which had rendered the nation he imitated masters of India. The naboh of Moorshedabad, Meer Cossim Ali, attempted to interfere on helialf of some of the approaching struggle with little apprethe weaker chiefs in 1762-'3, but sustained [a signal defeat; and an expedition sent by the Bengal government, in 1767, to snecour the rajah of Nepaul, proved equally unsuc-Prithi Narayan died in 1771, but his successors carried on the same scheme of conquest, crossed the Gogra river, seized Kumaon, and even strove to gain possession of the rich valley of Cashmere. The tion, and considerable surprise was excited lowland rajahs, when transferred by the cession of the vizier of Onde from Mussulman to British rule, were suffered to retain undisturbed possession of their territories on The Goorkpayment of a fixed land-tax. alese, on the contrary, as each hill-chieftain was successively vanquished, exterminated the family, and, with the conquered possessions, took up the claims and contests of their former lords, and were thus brought in contact with numerous rajahs and zemindars, actually occupying the position of British The complaints laid before the subjects. supreme government by these persons were generally but lightly regarded; and, unless | under very peculiar circumstances, the Goorkalese were treated as good neighbours, whom it was desirable to conciliate. Under a strong government at Calcutta, outrages on the frontier were of comparatively rare occurrence, and, when firmly demanded, reparation was usually made; but the unfortunate measures of Sir George Barlow incited aggressions which were not to be so easily checked as heretofore. rajah (a prince with a long string of names, differently given by different authorities)* was a minor. The chief authority rested in the hands of a military aristocracy, headed by a powerful family called Thappa, of whom one member, Bheem Sein, exercised the office of prime minister, with the title of general, while his brother, Umur Sing, held command of the army. The expediency of command of the army. war with the English was much canvassed The decision by the Goorkalese chiefs. arrived at was, that their native fastnesses would always afford an invulnerable position, and by issuing thence on predatory inenr-sions, a state of hostility could be made more by Prinsep, Maharajah Kurman Jodh Bikram Sah Bahadur Shumsheer Jung. His father was assassinated by his own brother in full durbar, in 1805. The fratricide was slain in the ensuing barbarous affray, in which most of the chief nobles perished, and the Styled by Fraser, Jirban Joodeber Bheem Sah;

advantageous, than peace purchased at the sacrifice of their favourite system of eneroach-The British, on their part, viewed ment. licusion. The Bengal officers, especially, made sure of victory. From the days of Clive to those of Lake, with searcely an exception, they had but to take the field and march straight against the enemy, to ensure his precipitate flight. The uncontested occupation of Bhootwal and Shcoraj, seemed the natural effect of their military reputaby tidings that the Goorkalese had set them at defiance, by taking advantage of the withdrawal of the troops to surround the three police-stations in Bhootwal, where after killing and wounding twenty-four of the defenders, the superior local officer of the British had been murdered in a very bar-The governor-general debarous manner. manded from the court of Katmandoo the disavowal of any share in this outrage, and the punishment of its perpetrators; but reecircd a menacing reply, which precluded further hope of an amicable arrangement, and occasioned the issue of a declaration of war by Lord Moira in November, 1814.

The army destined for the invasion of the enemy's frontier, formed four divisions, of which the first, under Major-general Marley, comprised 8,000 men, and was intended to march against Katmandoo. The other three divisions, under Maj.-generals Wood, Gillespie, and Ochterlony (4,500, 3,500, and 6,000 strong), were directed to attack different portions of the hostile frontier; besides which, Major Latter was furnished with a body of 2,700 men for the defence of the Purneah frontier, to the eastward of the Coosy river.+ The campaign opened with the siege of the petty fortress of Kalunga or Nalapanee, situated on an insulated hill, a few miles from Dehra, the chief town in the Doon (or valley.) The garrison consisted of about 600 men, headed by a nephew of Umur Sing. The English expected to carry the place by storm according to custom, and the gallant Rollo Gillespie, with fatal impetuosity, led an assault, in which, while waving his hat to cheer the troops, he was shot through the heart. The siege was discontinued pending the arrival of a battering train from Delhi; royal family was nearly extinguished. The present rajah (then an infant) was secreted in the zenana.

+ Major (now General) Latter rendered good service
by his negotiations with the rajah of Sikkim (a hill state east of Nepaul), and his small detachment "accomplished more than it was destined to atterna".

but even when a breach had been effected, the soldiers, dispirited by their former repulse, could not be induced to advance. was not until the assailants had sustained a loss, in killed and wounded, considerably beyond the entire number of the garrison, that measures were taken to shell the fort, and eut off the supply of water obtained without the walls. The besieged were compelled to evacuate the place on the 30th November, 1814. The conquerors found in the mangled bodies of hundreds of men and women, dead or dying of wounds and thirst, fearful evidence of the determination of the foe with whom they had now to deal. This inauspicious commencement seems to have inspired three out of four of the leaders of the British army (including Martindell, the successor of Gillespic) with a degree of timidity and distrust, which can searcely be disguised beneath the name of prudence; and General Marley was struck off the staff for neglect General Ocliterlony and incompetency. displayed a quickness and energy which, combined with discretion, enabled him to eope with difficulties of a new and uuexpeeted order, and, although opposed by Umur Sing in person, to obtain triumphs to counterbalance the disasters which attended the other divisions. He had formed from the first a just estimate of the character of the enemy, whom he met with their own weapons, especially by the crection of stockaded posts, before unknown in Anglo-Indian warfare. The opening movements of the English veteran were eautious and The making of roads, and diplomatic proceedings with wavering chiefs, oceupied much time before his masterly policy could be developed; but its effects were manifested by the reduction of the Ramgurh and other forts, and by the withdrawal of Umur Sing, with his entire force, to the The stone fort strong position of Maloun. thus named, and that of Soorajgurh, formed the extremities of a line of fortified posts, creeted on a lofty and difficult ridge projecting into the Sutlej. Of the intervening peaks, all were occupied by stockades except Of these two, Ryla peak and Deothul. Ochterlony, on his approach, succeeded in obtaining possession; the first without difficulty, the second after a sanguinary conflict

• The Goorkalese displayed throughout the eampaign an unexpected amount of chivalry, and exhibited, in many ways, their confidence in the good faith of the British. After the battle of Deothul, faith of the British. After the battle of Deothul, they asked for the body of Bhukti Sing, whose loss they loudly bemoaned, declaring that the blade of they loudly bemoaned, declaring that the blade of

on the 15th April, 1815. Blinkti Thappa, a famous leader, above seventy years of age, who commanded at Soorajgurh, represented to Umur Sing the necessity of dislodging the British from Deothul; and on the morning of the 16th, an attack was made by the flower of the Goorkalese army on all accessible sides.* Happily, the previous night had been spent in throwing up defences in expectation of a renewed struggle. enemy came on with such furious intrepidity, that several men were bayoneted or cut to pieces within the works; and their fire was directed so effectively against the artillerymen, that at one time three officers and one bombardier alone remained to serve the guns. A reinforcement, with ammunition from Ryla peak, arrived at a critical moment, and the British, after acting for two hours on the defensive, became in turn assailants; Bhukti was slain, his followers put to flight, and a complete victory obtained, at the cost of 213 killed and wounded. enemy left about 500 men on the ground before Deothul. The event afforded a great triumph to the native troops, by whom it was almost wholly achieved. It was followed by the evacuation of Soorajgurh, and the eoncentration of the hostile force in Maloun, against which place a battery was raised by the end of the first week in May.

In the meantime, the governor-general had been actively employed in initiating a series of spirited operations on the side of Rohileund. While visiting the north-western provinces, he had learned that the inhabitants of Kumaon were held in rigorous subjection by the Goorkalese, who frequently seized and sold their wives and children to enforce the most arbitrary exactions. To supply the place of regular troops, levies were made from the warlike Patans of Robilennd, under the auspices of two commanders (Garduer and Hearsey), who had come over from Sindia at the time of the Mahratta The corps organised by Major Hearsey was dispersed by the enemy, and its leader made prisoner; but Lieutenant Gardner succeeded in making his way into the heart of the province of Kumaon, and took up a position in sight of Almora, the capital, where a force of regular infantry and artillery, under Colonel Nicholls, joined him in their sword was broken. Ochterlony complied with the request, and sent the gory corpse, wrapped in rich shawls, in acknowledgment of the hravery of the fallen chief. His two widness sacrificed themselves on the middle of April. The Scholee heights. distant from the fort about seventy yards, were gained after a severe contest; and the governor, thus elosely menaced, and straitened for want of supplies, signed terms of surrender for the whole province, and for the retirement of the Goorkalese troops to the east of the Kalce river-articles which were duly excented.

Tidings of the fall of Almora facilitated the eonquest of Maroun. The dispirited Goorkalese entreated Umur Sing to make terms for himself and his son Runjoor, whom General Martindell had ineffectually besieged in the fort of Jythuk. The old elief refused, declaring, that the rainy season, now close at hand, would compel the British to withdraw; and he used the most severe coercion to retain the allegiance of the troops. But in vain: the majority of both officers and men came over to the British camp as prisoners of war; and Umur Sing, with but 250 remaining adherents, beheld the batteries ready to open upon the walls of Maloun. Convinced of the hopelessness of prolonged resistance, the proud chief resigned his last stronghold, together with all the territory from Kumaon west-ward to the Sutlej, including, of course, Jythuk. Thus a campaign which, in Jannary, promised nothing but disaster, terminated in May with the conquest of the whole hilly tract from the Gogra to the Sutlej, a country hitherto deemed impenetrable to Europeaus. The triumph was, in fact, mainly due to native troops; of whom, with the exception of a few artillerymen, Ochterlony's division was exclusively com-It is important to add, that this force was extremely well officered, and that its operations were materially facilitated by the ability of the field engineer, Lieutenant Lawtie, who died, aged twenty-four, of feyer, brought on by excessive fatigue and exposure endured before Maloun.*

Ochterlony received a baronetcy, and a pension of £1,000 a-year in acknowledgment of his services. The governor-general was rewarded by a step in the peerage, being ereated Marquis of Hastings. Various important arrangements attended the conclusion, or rather interruption, of hostilities. Many of the Goorkalese entered the British service, and were formed into what were termed the Nusecree battalions; a provincial eorps was also raised for eivil duties in Kumaon, which now became a British pro-The Doon was retained, and ultivinec. mately annexed to the Scharanpoor district. The remaining hill country was restored to the several chiefs from whom it had been wrested by Umur Sing, with the exception of a few military posts; and the whole territory was declared under British protection. The Katmandoo government was not, however, yet sufficiently humbled to accept the terms of peace offered by Lord Hastings. Umur Sing and his sons strenuously advoeated the renewal of war, in preference to suffering a British resident and military establishment to be stationed at the capital. Another object of dispute was the fertile but insalubrious Turace and the adjacent Sal (shorea robusta) forest, of which, according to a Goorkalese saying, "every tree is a mine of gold."† The proposed treaty was therefore rejected, and Sir David Ochterlony again took the field in January, 1816, at the head of nearly 17,000 effective men, including three European regiments. All the known passes through the first range of hills had been earefully fortified by the enemy; but, happily, a route was discovered through a deep and narrow ravine, by which the Cherea heights were gained without resistance, and the position of the Goorkalese completely turned. tish general marched on to the beautiful valley of the Raptee, and was moving up to Mukwampoor, when a skirmish of posts paved the way to a general action, in which he obtained a signal victory; whereupon the royal red scal was hastily affixed to the rejeeted treaty of Segoulee, and a duly qualified envoy presented it on his knees at the durbar of General Ochterlony, in presence of all the vakeels in the camp.

By a politic concession, a part of the Turace was surrendered to the Nepaulese. The portion skirting the Oude dominions was retained, and, together with Khyreegurh, a pergunnah of Rohilcund, was made over to Ghazi-oo-deen, in payment of a second loan of a erore of rupees obtained from him during the war, and furnished out of the hoards of his father, Sadut Ali, the late nabob-vizier, who died in 1814.

During the Goorkalese war, indications

General Ochterlony deeply Iamented his brave condjutor. The whole army went into mourning, and afterwards erected a monument to the memory Burman empire. The elephant, rhinoceros, at of Lieut. Lawtie in the cathedral church of Calcutta. buffalo abound in the forest, and rayage the plain.

[†] The timber is used in ship-building, though far inferior to the teak of Malabar and of the Burman empire. The elephant, rhinoceros, and

of a desire to take advantage of any symptom | Before this event, the incursions of the of weakness in the British government were Pindarries had alarmingly increased, and in not wanting on the part of Sindia, or even 1816 they remained twelve days within the of the poishna, who now began to think British frontier, during which time they were himself strong enough to stand alone, and ascertained to have plundered 339 villages, by which he had even to forture. The wounded 505, and subjected 3,603 others to transplant conclusion of the late hostilities checked the development of these feels tained by individuals at Guutoor (in the Norture 1). ings, and left Lord Hastings at liberty to there Circurs) and claushers, were estimated direct his thirf attention to the suppression at about £100,000 sterling. The poishwa, of the productry bonds of Pandarries and Sindia, and the divided authorities on whom Patons, who had arisen, "like masses of the management of the Holear principality patrefaction, but of the corruption of weak had devolved, affected to desire the suppressand express states." The chief difference sion of these enormities; but as it was between them was, that the Patans were notorious they favoured the perpetrators, nalitary incrematics, exociated for the pur-puse of invaling or plundering such states such described governments, as they could over over or infinidate; while the Pandarries were comardly and despurate his English patrons, had become evidently handitti, whose object was universal rapine. [hostile since the accession to office, in 1815, Against both these descriptions of maran- of one Trimbukjee Dainglia, a menial serders the English authorities were compelled vant, who had found the path to power to be continually on the alert. The most by promoting the gratification of his maseffectual defensive measure was considered [ter's ill-regulated desires. The assassination to be the establishment of subsidiary troops of Gaugadhur Shastree,! the representative in Berar. The death of Ragojee Bhouslay of the Guicowar chief, who had come to appeared likely to facilitate this arrange. Poons to settle a question of finance, under ment, for his only on Purssiee, being the express protection of the English, justified paralysed and an ideat, the nephew of the the resident (Mountstuart Elphinstone) in late rajah Muelajee, commonly called Appa demanding the removal from office of the Salub, assumed the regency; and the better linstigator of the crime. Bajec Rao, with to establish his ascendancy, sought the re- | characteristic indecision, first surrendered cognition of the linglish at the cost of his favourite, and then unceasingly solicited entering up in the defensive alliance which his deliverance from the imprisonment which they particularly desired. Appa Salob was, was the only punishment the English authorat heart, decidedly opposed to the establish-rities desired to inflict. Artifice effected ment of foreign influence at Nagpoor, and [the deliverance of the prisoner. The Mahno somer felt bimself firmly scated on the ratta groom of one of the British officers gadi, than he sought the means of re-lin the garrison of Tanna, in the island of covering the purchase-money of his position | Salsette, while engaged in exercising his hy entering into negotiations with the court | master's horse, sang beneath the window of Poons, then the nucleus of a powerful of Trimbukjee what appeared to be one of confederacy forming against the English-a the monotonous ballads of the country, but proceeding which he accompanied by the [which really communicated to the captive a precaution of causing his young and afflicted plan of escape, of which he took advantage ward to be strangled in the night of Feb- on the evening of the 12th of Septemmary 1st, 1817.

* Malcolm's Central India, i., 431. Sir John, on the authority of the l'indarty leader, Kureem Khan, gives the eigmology of the term Pindarry-from Pinda, an intoxicating drink which they were constantly imbitting. Kureem Khan was a Itohilla.

† No fewer than twenty-five women drowned themselves to escape violation; many sacrificed also their young children. The ordinary modes of tor-ture inflicted by the Pindarries were—heavy stances placed on the head or chest; red-hot irons applied to the soles of the feet; tying the head of a person into a tobra or bag for feeding horses, filled with hot his predecessors .- (Duff's Mahrattas, iii., 374.)

Having made an excuse for bcr. 1816. asher: throwing oil on the clothes and setting fire to them; besides many others equally harrible.

Their favourite weapon was the long Mahratta spear.

† Gungadhur was the name of the ambassador;
Shastree, n litle denoting intimate acquaiatance with the Shastras, a portion of the sacred writings of the Hindnos. Bajee Ran was himself supposed to have sanctioned the murder, to revenge an affront given by the Shastree in refusing to allow his wife in visit the palace of the peishwa, then the scene of licentinusness unparalleled during the sway of any of

quitting his rooms, he reached an embrasure, and lowered himself into the ditch by means of a rope, secured to a gun by one of his accomplices. This adventure greatly increased the reputation of Trimbukjee with | his own countrymen, and ho began to assemble troops on the Mahadeo hills to the north of the Necra. The military preparations of the peishwa, and his secret correspondence, and even interviews, with a the Pindarries, no power could be suffered subject against whom he affected to desire the co-operation of British troops, left little doubt of his perfidious intentions; and the governor-general considered himself justified in adopting a very summary mode of diminishing the power which he expected to see employed in counteracting his plans for the destruction of the Pindarries. Bajec Rao was treated as an avowed enemy, and required, as the only means of averting war, to surrender Trimbukjee, to renounce the right of supremacy over the Mahratta confederation, and to surrender certain territories in Malwa, Guzerat, and the Decean, for the purpose of supporting a force of 5,000 cavalry and 3,000 infantry, to be maintained in lieu of the previous British contingent. Other humiliating concessions were exacted from Bajee Rao, by the treaty of Pooua ratified in June, 1816, which in fact reduced him from the position of an independent prince to that of a mere The treaty of Bassein had been censured for the sacrifices it entailed on the peishwa; and "the extension of the subsidiary system in 1805, had led the way to the retirement of the most enlightened statesman who had ruled in India,5 * By this time the weathercock of public opinion had veered round, and the Court of Directors expressed themselves well satisfied with the course of events, and convinced "of the irrepressible tendency of our Indian power to enlarge its bounds and to augment its preponderance, in spite of the most peremptory injunctions of forbearance from home, and of the most serupulous obedience to them in the government abroad."†

The sanction of the E. I. Cy. was likewise

Auber's British Power in India, ii., 528. Secret Letter of Directory to Bengal, Jan., 1818.

Prinsep's Military Transactions, ii., 21. Among the malcontents assembled under Ameer Khan was Dya Ram, a refractory talookdar, or zemindar of the Doab, who, in 1816, had been expelled by British troops from his fort of Hatras.

The peishwa had command over 28,000 horse; 16,250 the peishwa had command over 28,000 horse; 16,250 the numerous armed population of Hydrot; 140 guns. Holcar—20,000 horse; 7,940 foot; 140 guns. Holcar—20,000 horse; 7,940 foot;

given to offensive operations to the extent requisite to drive the Pindarries from their haunts on the Nerbudda and from Malwa. The views of the Marquis of Hastings were more comprehensive: he considered that the peace of Central India demanded the total extermination of these predatory bands; and to that end "did not hesitate boldly to assume the principle that, in the operations against to remain neutral, but all should be required to join the league for their suppression.";

At this period (1817) the Pindarries, under their respective leaders, were stated, by the lowest computation, at 15,000 horse, 1,500 foot, with twenty guns. Other writers carried the estimate as high as 30,000; but authorities agreed, that when joined by volunteers and adventurers from other native armies, they often exceeded the latter amount. The Pataus, under Ameer Khan, were estimated at 12,000 horse, 20,000 foot, and 200 guns. Supposing the contemplated confederation between the four Mahratta leaders (the peishwa, Sindia, Holear, and the Bhonslay), the Nizam, Ameer Khan,§ and the Pindarries, to have been carried out, a force of above 130,000 horse, 87,000 foot, and nearly 600 guns might have been brought into the field to dispute British supremacy.

Measures had been already taken to diminish the danger of hostility on the part of the peishwa, and the subsidiary alliance lately formed with Berar was expected to ensure neutrality in that quarter. plan of the campaign, therefore, was principally formed with relation to the independent states of Sindia, Holear, the Rajpoots, the nabob of Bhopal, and the chiefs of Something after the fashion Bundelcund. of the old "circular hunts" was to be attempted, by assembling armies round these countries which should, by simultaneous movements, close in so as to encompass the Pindarries and their abettors at all points, provision being made for the defeat of the project through the strength or cunning of the enemy, as well as for the defence of the

107 guns. Bhonslay-15,766 horse; 17,826 foot; 85 guns. Nizam-25,000 horse; 20,000 foot. The Nizam himself was too weak and indolent, if not incapable, to be suspected of any intention to intigue against the English; but his sons were turbulent youths, whose vicious practices it had been necessary to assist their father in restraining; and it was difficult to judge what might be the conduct of the numerous armed population of Hyderabad, in

LORD HASTINGS MARCHES AGAINST THE PINDARRIES-1817. British territory. The forces destined to rican chief was a mere adventurer, whose deunits) territory. The torces destined to rears emer was a mere naventurer, whose de-certy out this extensive scheme comprised mands could only be canceded by legalising entry out this extensive scheme comprised mands could only be conceded by legalising above 91,090 regular troops, and 23,090 the nearpations on which they were founded, move Milital regular troops, and 25,090; the asurpatans on which they were founded, it may be doubted whether temporary experite allowed horses, divided and subdivided it may be doubted whether temporary experimentally become the control disease. irregular horse, divided and subdivided it may be denoted whether temporary expe-in accordance with the plan of the can- diency, rather than justice, was not the in accordance with the plan of the cam-release, rather than justice, was not the page. On the 20th October, 1817, the mar-lactuating medical in the arrangement entered pagn. On the 20th October, 1817, the mar- actuating matice in the arrangement entered quest, in person, assumed command of the of Kotah, and other minor patentates, were grand army at Secundra (near Kalpee), and of smaller in a suirit similar to those formed be after crossing the Jumps be a bridge of made in a suirit similar to those formed by grand army at Secundra (near Kalpee), and of Kotan, and other innor potentates, were after crossing the Jumna by a bridge of made in a spirit similar to those formed by niter crossing the annua my a pringe of made in a spirit similar to those formed by hearts, proceeded to occupy a position south; Loke under the anspices of Lord Wellesley; at the large plane where Circles and the restaurable of the large plane. heats, proceeded to occupy a position south; there muger the anspices of Buolal, especially, entered of Guahor, where Sindia had established his and the nabob of Bhopal, especially, entered of Guahor, where Sindia had established his and the nabob of Bhopal, especially of Guahor, where Sindia had established his continuously and continuously an or conner, where small had established his and the hands of bhopal, especially, entered permanent example while another division of cordially into the intended expedition against permanent compart while another division of cordiany into the intended expedition against the Henrial tripps took up its station at the despetic freebooters from whose ravages the Henrial tripps took up its station at the despetic freebooters from whose ravages the Henrial tripps took up its station at the despetic freebooters from whose ravages. The neught troops took up its station of the despute recuotiers from smost ranges. Distributed evidence had been list small territories had sustained almost despute the control of the despute troops and sustained almost despute the control of the despute troops and sustained almost despute the control of The Pindarry chiefe, meanwhile, aware of obtained that Sindia had not only pledged irremediable damage. himself to support the Pindarries, but had the extensive preparations made against then attempted a treacherous correspond them, randoved themselves during the rains dence with the Neurollese. This intercented dence with the Nepsulese. This intercepted them, employed themselves during the rains communications around him to be contained their reconsting their reconsting during the remaining their reconsting during their reconsting during their remaining their reconsting during their remaining during the remaining their remaining during the remaining during during the remaining during the remaining during du himself to support the Pindarries, but had camps. The want of cordiality between the dence with the Sepances. His intercepted them, employed themselves mixing the rams of communications proved him to be only in recruiting their respective durans of communications proved him to be only in recruiting their respective horsess the the field and thus give an example which principal leaders—namely, Chectoo, Kurcen month according to the field and thus give an example which which principal leaders—namely of the second sec Khan, and Wasil Mohammed-prevented their forming any combined plan of resistauce. With the exception of some lubburs, would assuredly have been followed by the open approxime in arms of Ameer Khan and his latans, who were at present menned trance. With the exception of some manuers, to hold hack from their Pindarry friends, or identification of the Relief or Soulie Lad submitted the matters of the Relief or Sinds had inherited the nightion of his predecessor their allies. Fittle attenut of connection was their allies, little attempt at opposition was made; and losing their usual netivity, the majority of the Pindarries retreated passively before the advancing foe, fixing their He had not autropated the skilful movelast hope on the secret assurances of support The governor-general floes not appear to received from Poons. have anticipated any struggle on the part of To bide the event of a siege in the peidawa to recover his lost authority. Gwalior, or to repair to his distant domi-

Mr. Elphinstone, in his capacity of resident, lead seen ample reason to take precautions against this highly probable event; but Bajee Rao, in an interview with the politieal arent, Sir John Malcolm, lind conducted himself so plansibly, that Sir John, completely duped by professions of grateful attachment for early support, mingled with sad complaints of the harsh policy recently mons and join the Pindarries, with the chance of heing intercepted and compelled to risk the event of a general engagement, were lath humiliating and dangerous measures, which he thought best to avoid by agreeing to the demands of the English. These involved active concurrence against the Pindarries, and the temporary surrender of the forts of Hindia and Ascergleur, adopted, forgot the character of the archas a pledie of fidelity. The treaty exacted hypocrite with whom he had to deal, and from Sindia was followed by the submission netually advised the peishwa to continue of Ameer Khao, who agreed to disband his army, if confirmed in passession of the terri-1 In 1797, two Pindarry leaders, named Heeroo tary of which he was in the actual tenure I in 1794, two remarry leaders, named Herodo and Burrun, who were also brothers, offered the services of themselves and their 5,000 followers to the services of themselves and williams in the march of themselves and services in the march of themselves and their services of themselves are services and themselves are services and themselves are services and themselves are services. under grants from Holear. As this notothe state of Illiopal, as mixiliaries in the war then carried on with Berar. Heing rejected, they went • The Decem force, under Sir Thomas History carried on with Berar. Heing rejected, they went off and made a similar proposition to and bade although, who received it favourably, and bade them law west library law and law west library. or the Decem torce, under Sir Thomas Histop, uncluding a receive corps, the Guzerat division, and the troops left al Poona, Hyderahad, and Nagaration of the troops are the corps of the co Bhonslay, who received it invourably, and batte them lay waste Bhopal, then in a most flourishing condition. The order was obeyed with cruel and lasting divide the special conditions are able to the condition of the special conditions. and the troops lett at Poons, tiyurranan, and Sage poor) numbered 57,000 regulars, of whom 5,255 were caracty. The Bengal force comprised 31,000 were caracty. dition. The order was obeyed with cruel and taxting dition. The chiefs were plundered by their employer like Herar rajah. Heeroo, the father of Wasil Modeller of Managara died in prison; Burrun at Ascerghur. were cavarry. The Bengal force comprised of Americality, including 5,000 cavalry. (Col. Blacker.)

† Sindia serred Gwalier upon the death of Americal Sindia serred Gwalier and metallished his army in hojec Inglia in 1808, and established his army in line Herar rajam. Meeroo, me tamer of Asserghur.

the neighbourhood, where he remained until his own the neighbourhood, where he remained until his own demise in 1827. A city sprang up there which from rivalled Oojein, if not in the costliness of its structures of least in the amount of nondation. structures, at least in the amount of population.

and les l'arms, who were at present inclined the judgment or decision of his predecessor.

ment by which he found himself menaced by a formulable force in front and in the enlisting recruits for the landable purpose of ments, advanced to the plain between Kicker co-operating with his good friends the Ung- and the city, to most the Mahanta theory. levied troops from all quarters, and secretly imprement, sent word to Golda had to the the endearoured to induce the British sepays first gam. Golds, swing the messagen and stationed at Poona to desert their colours, suspecting the nature of his evenue, waterd. The native officers and regulars were, with not his arrival, but commenced the attack out exception, proof against these solicita- by opening a battery of nine game, details tions, which in many instances were made ling a strong coups of model camels, and known to their commanders, irregular battalions, under Major Ford, left. A spirited charge was made made has contained a large proportion of Mahrattas, and these were naturally more subject to temptation. It is asserted that the peishwa desired, before proceeding further, to be rid of the resident by assassination; but that Bappoo Gokla, the chief Mahratta leader, positively refused to suffer the perpetration of so base a crime, the more especially sinen he had received peculiar kindness from the intended victim. Happily, Mr. Elphinstone was on his guard alike against national and individual hostility, and waited auxiqualy the first symptom of undisguised hostility. in anticipation of which a regiment had arrived from Bombay. Thinking the cantonment in Poona too exposed, the station was changed to the village of Kirken, four miles distant; a step which, being attributed to fear, greatly encouraged the Maliratian, who began to plunder the old cantonments. At length, on the 4th of Nov., 1817, More Dikshut, the minister of the peishwa, actuated by personal attachment, warned Major Ford to stand neuter in the coming struggle, and thus save himself and his family from the destruction which was battle of Kirken must ver remain con shortly to overwhelm the whole British de-prienous omeny, the hard fought field of tachment. Up to this moment the major, India, for the great dispropertion of the though in daily communication with the combatante. The Mohanta fore composed city, had been so completely hoodwinked by 10,000 merby and 2,000 feet then been Bajee Rao, as to entertain no emption of was 500 ments killed and normal of the population of the statement of t intended treschery. On the following day, which, a considerable analys of the a sale the Believe of their grantly and an embessive member, was After their order of the production of their grantly and embessive member, was After their order of the production of the production of the production of the production of the and the production of the production of the and the production of and his mine had him three to admit said of TIME man. It was few anchorses of any mine in the first all him I defined the first of the contract of the contrac reflere for the Fort of the Frontactory of first considering the motors when the execution is a large considering the angle of the first considering the angle of the considering the angle of the constant of the second of the considering the angle of the constant of the applications and professional time religions. Think the apparial to pleased and inches. The Legal belyide, decling this course

a management of the contract o

Thus encouraged, Bajee Rao openh The peisland disconcerted by the datus But the pushing forward his earthly to the tight and direction by Mora Dikshut, with a select body of 6,000 horse, bearing the June Palla of swillow-tailed golden permon of the empto. They came down like a torrest on the British front, but were steadily encountered by the 7th Initialion. Colonel Harr had "formed and fed" this corps; and man, though completely paralysed on one addihe took life post by its polome, value and coffeeted. One full went through his but, nuother grazed the bend of ble house, but attendants were shot by his side; but the inflym officor, unlarge and unllarayed, consimed to cheer and direct life min. The ndynnea of the assistants was happily inpeded by a deep slough (the relationed of which was not proviously apapeated by offiner party), standed innovibility in front of the British Hao. The envely, while we ambling out of the mire, were exposed to the reserved fire of Bury's deficiency Morn Dikelint was filled, the force of the charge broken, confusion spread through the Meliratta ranks, and the advance of the Empheli proved the signal for a general retreat. The menuted treatment. On the community day, remony a considerate, better the first sale news of the approach of a light latinism, which and highly health from some his from Servor, determined the treative adds. The made number of the Which persons defer the attack to longer trape appeal to the other, largely appeal to the other, largely appeal to the other of the persons were continued to the last outlinow. Major funds have here of many of many of the last outlinow.

The State State of the state of

in agreement the law of the said the said for alarmed by the unexpected turn of events, two 6-pounders, manned by twenty-four and gave over all power into the hands of Luropeans, after a long night march, reached Golds, who was auxious to continue the contest. "We may have taken our shrouds about our heads," he raid, "Int we are determined to die with pur swords in our bands," * This was not, however, the general feeling of the Mahrattas. They had little cause for attachment to the grasping and meapable Bajee Bro; and he displayed an after want of confidence in their will or ability to protect him, by taking the approoch of a British reinforcement, under General Smith, as the signal for a midnight retreat towards Sattara, Poons, thus a second time deserted by its severeign, surrendered on the following day; and the necessary arrangements having been made for its retention, General Smith started off in pursuit of the priches, who, though a fugitive, was still at the head of a formidable army. He was further strengthened. by the open adhesion of Appa Salub, the rajah of Berar, between whom and the British force, under Colonel Scott, a severe conflict took place on the heights near Nagpoor, on the night of the 26th of November. The rajah being defeated, made terms of peace, for the fulfilment of which he was himself to be the guarantee, as a sort of prisoner in his own palace; but Mr. (afterwards Sir Richard) Jenkins, learning that Appa Salub was only waiting an opportunity of excape, seized and sent him strongly escorted towards Benares. The captive, though treated heretofore without much ceremony, was suffered to choose his own escort; the result of which was, that the British officer on gnard, having been made to beheve that his charge was an invalid, gave a linsty glance at the hed on which Appa Sahih usually slept, and turned away after this slack performance of his nightly duty, without discovering that a pillow had been made to take the place of a person who was already many miles distant.

General Smith followed the peishwa through the Ghauts, but failed in bringing him to action. This much-desired object was, however, unexpectedly accomplished on the 1st of January, 1818, by a detachment proceeding to support Colonel Burr in resisting an expected attack on Poona. Captain Staunton, with one hattalion of N. I. 600 strong, 350 frregular horse, and

and the families of the native troops who fell into the hands of the Mahratias were cruelly maltreated

· Duff's Mahrattas, iii., 129.

the hills above Corygania, a village overhanging the *teep bank of the Beema river, and beheld with surprise the whole force of the prishwa, estimated at 25,000 to 28,000 men, encamped on the opposite bank. Both parties pushed on for the village, and sucreeded in occupying different portions; but the British gained possession of a small choultry, or place of refreshment, which had originally been a temple. Here the detachment remained, under a burning sun, cut off from the water from noon to nine o'clock, disputing every foot of ground, and repulsing repeated attacks with the bayonet. The prishwa ascended an adjoining eminence, and, with the rajah of Sattara by his side, avaited what seemed a certain victory. Golds and Trimbukice (who had now joined his master) directed the attacks; and the Arab incremaries, whose superior conrage was acknowledged by superior pay, at one time became masters of the choultry, but it was soon recaptured. The struggle seemed hopeless, but surrender was not thought of, "See," said Captain Staunton, pointing to the headless trunk of Licutenant Chisholm, lying beside a gun, "the mercy of the Mohrattas!" The troops, though some were fainting and others nearly frantic with thirst, declared that sooner than fall into the hands of their focs, they would die to a man; and the result seemed probable. Happily, towards nightfall, a supply of water was procured. The firing gradually ceased; and at daybreak, when the brave band prepared to renew the conflict, the enemy was descried moving off on the road to Poons, in consequence of the rumoured advance of General Smith. Captain Staunton, who was unburt, retreated to Scroor; and the government, in commemoration of this gallant affair, raised the corps engagedt to the much-coveted rank of grenadiers, and added "Corygaum" to the name of "Mangalore," previously borne by the first regiment of Bombay native infantry.

Sattara was besieged by a combined force umler generals Smith and Pritzler, on the 9th of February, and capitulated on the following day. A manifesto was issued by Mr. Elphinstone, on behalf of the British government, taking formal possession of the dominions of the peishwa, with the view of

The hattalion (2nd of 1st Bombay N. I.) lost 153 killed and wounded; the artillerymen (26 in all), 15; eavalry, 96; officers, 5 out of 8, including 2 surgeons.

retaining all except a small tract to be re- tors at Corygaum), and sent prisoner to served for the rajah of Sattara, who, with his family, was still in the hands of Bajce Rao. General Smith again started off in pursuit, and came up with the Mahratta force at Ashtce, to the north-westward of Shola-Bajee Rao, as usual, thought only of making good his retreat, and left Gokla, with a body of eight or ten thousand horse, to fight the English. General Smith,* though in other respects a good officer, is said to have been ignorant of the art of manœuvring cavalry, and he was opposed by a leader of unrivalled skill in that favourite branch of Mahratta warfare. The English chief was cut down, and some confusion ensued; of which before Gokla could take advantage, he was himself slain-falling, as he had promised, sword in hand. There was no one eapable of taking his place, and the Mahrattas fled in wild dismay, leaving elephants, eamels, and baggage of all descriptions, to the victors. † The rajah of Sattara, with his mother and two brothers, voluntarily threw themselves on British protection; and being placed under the care of Mr. Elphinstone, and assured of the favourable intentions of the British government, the rajah assumed the state of a sovereign. wound of General Smith did not prove dangerous, and he was soon enabled to resume the pursuit of Bajee Rao, which the excessive heat of the weather rendered an extremely arduous and depressing task. The men fell beneath sun-strokes more surely and speedily than in the recent engagements, and the hospitals became erowded. The fugitive peishwa had long been desirous to make terms of peace; and at length, when his intended passage across the Nerbudda was intercepted by Sir John Malcolm, he made proposals which that officer considered as affording satisfactory The terms ground for an arrangement. finally agreed to were the complete renunciation of every political right or claim by Bajec Rao, in return for an allowance of not less than eight lacs of rupees a-year. Beithoor, a place of sanctity near Cawapore, was appointed for his future residence. Trimbukjec was soon after captured in his lurking-place by a party of irregular horse under Lieutenant Swanston (one of the vic-Afterwards Sir Lionel Smith, govr. of Jamaica. The British loss amounted to only mineteen killed and wounded; that of the enemy, to 200. Transactions in India, 1813 to 1823, i., 107-111.

Mr. Prinsep was present at head-quarters, and lost seven servants and a moonshee in four days. During in that city .- (Prinsep: Wilson, ix., 253.)

the fort of Chunar, in Bengal.

neously earried on against the Pindarries. Soon after the signing of the treaty of alliance with Sindia, on the 5th of Nov., 1817, the army under Lord Hastings was over-

To revert to the operations simulta-taken by a violent postilence, since known as cholcra, t which traversed the whole of India, from Nepaul to Cape Comorin. The year was one of scarcity, the grain of inferior quality, and the situation of the British cantonments low and unhealthy.

For ten days the whole camp was an hospital; and the deaths in that short period amounted to a tenth of the total number collected. Towards the end of the month the troops removed to a healthy station at Erich, on the Betwa, and the epidemic had evidently expended its virulence. Notwithstanding this calamity, the object of Lord Hastings in advancing to Gwalior, was fully answered by the prevention of any co-operation between Sindia and the Pindarries. latter, after being expelled from their haunts in Malwa, were compelled to retreat in various directions, and annihilated or dispersed, with the exception of those under

Chectoo, who being pursued by Sir John Malcolm, took refuge in the camp of Holear, near Mahidpoor. The government of the Holear principality at this time rested in the hands of Toolsac Byc, the favourite mistress of the late Jeswunt Rao, who had exercised the chief authority during his insanity. After his death, she placed on the musnud his infant son Mulhar Rao, and proceeded to give vent to all the cruel caprices which could suggest themselves to the imagination of a woman of thirty years of age, handsome and of fascinating manners, but of an imperions and merciless temper and most li-Her last favourite, who eentious morals. assumed ex officio the reins of government, was the Dewan, Gunput Rao. He wavered between fear of the English and a desire to take part with the peishwa, then The commanders of battalions, in arms. especially the Patans, were adverse to entering upon any treaty by which their consequence was likely to be lowered; and fearing that the force under Malcolm, to which the division under Sir Thomas Hislop one week, 764 soldiers and 8,000 camp followers perished. Total deaths of Europeans in eamp in Nov.—148. The epidemic, called by the natives the

"black death," visited Calcutta in September, 1817, and for a long time destroyed above 200 per diem

had since been added, would overawe their [had long passively sustained, now spared not vacillating rulers into submission, they a Pindarry who fell into their hands; but threw Gunput Ran into prison, entired away | the child, Mulhar Rao, from the tent before which he was playing, and carried off Toolsac. Bye, by night, to the banks of the Second where, despite her cries, she was decapitated, and the body thrown into the river."

On the following day (21st of December, 1817), a pitched hattle took place, in which the British were completely successful, though at the cost of nearly 800 in killed l and wounded. The enemy lost 3,000 men, chiefly in the flight to Mundiscoor. The mother of the child Mulhar Rao, though a woman of inferior rank, being now the neknowledged regent of the Mahratta state, made full submession to the English; and in return for the cession of all claims in Rajast'han and south of the Sautpoora range, was confirmed in the netual powersom of the remembry territories of the princapality, at the court of which a British resident was to be established. Many of the old leaders repudiated this engagement, I and set off to jun Hajre Ran-an attempt in which some succeeded, but others were intercepted, and cut off or dispersed. t The ministers, under the new order of things, " dal not deplore an event which disembarrassed a bankrupt state of a mutineus sol- further bloodshed. diery, and cancelled a unafter of old and troublesame chauns."

The struggles of the Pindarries were nearly ended; Kurvem Khan, and other cheefs, surrendered on the promise of pardon and a larelshood, and received small grants | of land. Wasil Mohammed poisoned limrell. Cheetoo for some time contrived to clude pursuit, but was surprised in Dec., 1817, with the main body of his followers, and dispersed by a detachment from the garrison at Hindia. The Bleck (aboriginal peasantry) and the Grassias (native landowners), remembering the outrages they

* The career of Tooleac Bye resembles that of the heroine of a romance. She passed as the nicee, but was generally supposed to be the daughter, of Adjerba, an ambitious priest, who, though a professed mendicant, rose to rank and influence. He spared no pains in the education of Toolsae; and she, Malcolm not very gallantly remarks, was "tutored in more than the common arts of her sex." Jessuant Rao became enamoured with the fair intripante at first sight. She was married, but that mattered little. In a few days the lady was in the palace of Holear, her husband in prison, from whence he was re-leased nod sent home to the Decean with some presents. Toolsae Bye had an artful waiting-maid, double her own age, who, after having attained high sistence of his son, a youth of weak intellect.

Checton, with about 200 followers, still remained at large. ! Though driven from place to place, the daring freebooter bore up against misfortune with a spirit worthy a better cause; till be suddenly disappeared-none, not even his son and few remaining followers, knew how or where; for they had parted from him to bunt the forest for food. After some days, his horse was discovered grazing near the jungles of Ascerghur (where Appa Sahih had sought refnge), saddled and bridled; at a little distance lay a heap of torn and blood-stained garments, and a human head, the remains of a tiger's feast. It was a fitting death for the last of the Pindarries-the last that is deserving the name; for these bold maranders, deprived of their leaders, without a home or a rendezvous, never again became formidable. After the termination of the war with the prishwa, they gradually merged into the ordinary population, following the example of their leaders. Many of them settled in the Decean and Malwa, as cultivators; and some, employing their energies to a right use, became distinguished as active, improving farmers. The remaining Patan troops were conciliated or dispersed without

The flight of Appa Sahib caused much anxiety, which terminated with the fall of the fortress of Ascergliur (April, 1819), whence the ex-rajali escaped disguised as a fakeer, and soon sank into a state of insignificance, from which he never emerged. An infant grandson of Ragojee Bhonslay was chosen to hear that name and fill the vacant gadi, or throne of Berar, with the title of rajali, under the nominal regency of his grandmother, the British resident being vested with the actual control of affairs during the minority. The remaining operations of the war were chiefly directed to the expulsion station and amassed large sums by extortion (thereby exciting the envy of the minister on whom the fleeting affections of her mistress for the moment rested), was flung into prison, cruelly tortured, and driven to end her agonies by taking poison.—(Malcolm.)

† An excellent account of the Mahratta and Pindarry eampaigns of 1817-'18-'19, has been given by an officer engaged therein-Lieutenant-colonel Blacker.

Conditions of surrender were discussed on behalf of Cheetoo, but his terms were extravagant: moreover, he feared treachery and transportation; and even when dreaming, used to talk with horror of the sea, the lateful Cala pani, or black water. After his tragical end, a few fields were allotted for the subprairs, assembled in May, 1821, at Port of Rangoon had prevented the complete derepoys may well be excused for quaiting before the for when British officers fairly lost all self-control, and lay flown to serven themselves from danger. Colunci Smith ordered a retreat, which soon became a flight, and many lives would doubtless have against it without ours or sails !! been sacrificed had not the approach of reinforcements arrested the progress of both pursuers and pursued. A strong force was sent by Sir A. Campbell to drive the Burmese from Kykloo, but they had previously absconded. This affair, which occurred in October, 1824, was not calculated to eliver the army, or encourage them in a position No condaily becoming less endurable. sideration of pity for the nufartunate people and spirit to resist the repeated but illagainst the Burmere, made by the 47th regiment (about 1,100 in number), at Barrackpoor, in 1825. The min entreated to be dismissed and suffered to return to their homes, but without effect. The regiment was paraded, and the refusal of the men to march or ground their nems (which they held unloyded, though furnished with forty rounds of amof artillery, which killed numbers of them. About 200 were taken prisoners, of whom twelve were langed, and the remainder condemned to Isbour in irons. The court of inquiry appointed to report on the whole affair, declared the conduct of the unhappy soldiers "to have been an ebullition of despair at being compelled to murch without the means of doing so."—(Thornton's India, iv., 113.) How military men can reconcile their consciences to such proceedings as these, is perfectly incomprehensible.

•

.

Cornicallis, in the Great Andamans. Major-vastation of the country by its rovereign, general Sir Archib dd Campbell tool, com- and the invaders were consequently dismand of the land, and Commodure Grant appointed in their hopes of obtaining supof the marine portion of the expedition, plies of fresh meat and vegetables, and but the latter commander was speedily com- compelled to feed on putrid meat and had pelled, by ill-health, to give place to Captain hiscuit. The influence of dense jungle and Marryat. The forces safely reached Rans postilential anamp, aggravated by intense goon, the chief port of Ava, which was eva- heat and deluges of rain, spread fever and cuate I after a very feeble attempt at resist- dysentery through the camp: scurvy and ance." On the 10th of June, a successful hospital gangrene followed in their train; and attempt was made on the fortified camp and by the end of the monvoon scarcely 3,000 stockades at Kemendine, on the Irawaddy men were fit for active duty. The King of river. The outwork was taken by storm; Ava relied on the proverbial unlicalthiness of the liest man to gain the summit being Rangoon to aid the efforts of his ill-disci-Major (afterwards Sir Holert) Sale. These plined troops, and facilitate the performance conquests were followed by a disestrons ex- of his command to drive the invaders into prelition, which involved not only loss of the sea, or bring them to the capital to suffer hie, but of character. A Burmese detache torture and ignominy. Notwithstanding ment had formed stockades, under cover of this vaunting language, his majesty of the a fortified pageds, at Kykloo, fourteen miles golden foot became extremely uneasy on from Rangoon, and a hody of Madras infan- witnessing the pertinacity of the English, try was dispatched to drive them off, under and despite much affected rejoicing at their Licentenant colonel Smith. The Burnese having fallen into a trap by taking up a suffered the lingle-h to approach within position at Rangoon, he compared himself, early varils of the pegoda, and then opened in an unguarded moment, to a man who, their reserved lire with deadly effect. The having got a tiger by the tail, knew not whether to hold on or let go.† He is said to have been encouraged in "holding on," by an odd tradition (if any such did really exist) that the capital would remain invincible until a magical vessel should advance The Diana steamer, which accompanied the flotilla on the Irawaddy, though possessed of no magic power, did great service in capturing and destroying the war-boats and lire-rafts sent out by the Burmese. The arrival of reinforcements and supplies from Bengal restored the number of troops at Raugoon to about their original amount, and infused new life into the survivors, . Crawfurd's Embassy to Ara in 1827: App., p. 65.

† The Shwe-da-gon, n Buddhist temple of great sire and remarkable sanetity, being deserted by its pricelly guardians, was used by Sir A. Campbell as a military outwork. The building was of solid brickwork, elaborately decorated, and coated with gilding, whence its name-the Golden Pagodn. The portion deemed peculiarly sacred, was a solid cone 300 feet high, which was supposed to enshrine, or rather emomb, relies of the four last Budd'has-the staff of Krakuchunda, the water-pot of Gunaguna; the bathing-robe of Kasyapa, and eight hirs from the head of Gantama, or Sakyasinhn.—(Wilson's Mill, ix., 50. Also Hough, Symes, Snodgrass, Trant, and Havelock.) 1 Auber gives the tradition upon the authority of

Col. Hopkinson, who commanded the Mndras artillery in the Burmese war .- (ii., 579.) Trant also mentions it .- (Two Years in Ava, 211.)

THE MUNICIPAL TERMINATION OF RURMING WAR-1826. more of attended of the sact us forces the laner seemed to attest the sincerity of the defected Burmen, the borst of a military The first them from Ass. And the disconstruct of the involves induced the disconstruct angular induced the disconstruct angular induced the disconstruct angular induced the disconstruct angular induced the first structure acceptance of the first su army against them, induced the second transfer induced the first structure acceptance of the first su army against them, induced the second transfer induced in the first su army against them, induced the second transfer induced in the first su army against them, induced the second transfer induced in the first su army against them, induced the second transfer induced in the first su army against them, induced the second transfer induced in the first su army against them. The state of the second section of the second of official operations by the King of the second of official operations by the King of the second of official operations of the second of the second of official operations of the second of the s The state of the second of the Account to the second second state of the second sections of with the character of the second sections of the section sections of the second sections of the section sections of the section sections of the section sections of the section section sections of the section section sections of the section section section section sections of the section section section section sect For the state of t the state of the second state of the second section of the state of the state of the second on any part been not the state of the second second second on any part of the second And the property of the second The state of the days of the first tend of the state of the section of the state of the section The first policy through and solving more partially put to surface the manufactory of the Unitable prays of the Unitable prays of the Unitable prays and manufactory put to surface the manufactory put to the Manufactory put to surface the manufactory put to the Manufactory put to surface the manufactory put to the Manufactory put to surface the manufactory put to the Manufactory put to surface the man restrictions to the first second restriction of the majorithm of the finally con-The state of the s enveloperate for the kind we and in crise a rendert at his court, and to grant to their ships the privileges cujoyed by their ships the privileges cujoyed by their ships the privileges cujoyed all claim their ships the privileges cujoyed all claim. He likewise renounced all claim their court, and Minnipson, Lis court. He likewise renounced under princes of the Time maintain which were to be placed under princes which were to be placed under princes of the literature form. The opening signed was affixed to the province of the form the form. The "Peacest signed which were fulltraction of the Harmese around by the British covernment.

The "Peacest signed" was affixed to the Provisions of which were fulltractive to the capital, some delay and discussion; and thus ended
to the provisions of the capital, some delay and discussion; and thus ended come delay and discussion; and thus ended

the first Borness cost of life and treasures the first Borness cost of life and treasures and heavy cost of life and treasures the first and heavy cost of life and treasures the first property of th to make the strength of respect to both parties in favour of a durable peace The state of the second of the the minimum then the factor of the factor to both parties in factor of a durable peace last, when the factor of a durable peace the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate the princes, and were remarkable were covered with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate that the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate that the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes, and were remarkable for the elaborate with the princes of the princes

man and the second seco

The main body of the invading force returned as they came, by the line of the Irawaddy; but a body of native infantry succeeded in finding a practicable route to the Acug Pass, and thus clearly proved that nothing but ignorance of the geography of the country had, lumanly speaking, been the sole means of preventing "a portion of General Morrison's army from wintering in Ava, instead of perishing in the mountains of Arracau."*

Before the termination of the Burmese war, proceedings had occurred in another quarter which involved a fresh appeal to The successors of Runject Sing of Bhurtpoor, had faithfully observed the treaty of 1805. The latter of these rajahs, Baldeo Sing, had taken pains to ensure the protection of the supreme government for his son, Bulwant Sing, a child of five years old, by entreating the political agent at Delhi, Sir David Ochterlony, to invest the boy with a khelat, or honorary dress, which l was the form prescribed by Lord Wellesley as the official recognition necessary to legal succession on the part of all subsidiary and protected princes. The request of the rajah was granted early in 1824, in consideration of his infirm health; and his death a year after, not without suspicion of poison, was followed by a train of events which proved the justice of the precautions adopted on behalf of the heir. For about a month the reins of government rested quietly in the hands of the guardian and maternal uncle of the young rajah; but at the expiration of that time, the citadel was seized, the uncle murdered, and the boy made prisouer by Doorjun Sal (a nephew of the late) Baldeo Sing), who assumed the direction of affairs. This daring usurpation involved a defiance to the British government, which Sir David Ochterlony felt keenly; he also knew on how slender a thread hung the life of the boy, for whose protection the honour of England had been solemnly pledged. An immediate demand for the surrender of Bulwant Sing was refused; but the promptitude and determination with which it had been made, probably prevented another name from being added to the long list of Indian princes born too near a throne to escape death by a poisoned opiate, or the dexterous hand of an athlete. Sir David once against Bhurtpoor, before the enemy should have opportunity to take measures of defence. With this intent, the veteran general, then in his sixty-eighth year (fifty preceding ones having been spent in India), set on foot the necessary preparations, which were arrested by counter-orders from the supreme government. The heavy pecuniary cost, and numerous disasters attendant on the early stages of the Burmese war. combined with mortifying recollections of the issue of the former siege of Bhurtpoor, rendered Lord Amherst reluctant to enter on an undertaking which, if unsuccessful, might, it was feared, add to existing embarrassments-that of "hostilities with every state from the Punjab to Ava."† The successful defence of this Indian fortress against Lake, was still the favourite vaunt of every secret and open foe to English supremacy: the repetition of such an event was to be avoided at any cost. The annulment of the recent measures may be vindicated as a necessary act; but there can be no excuse for the harsh and peremptory manner in which it was enforced, to the bitter mortification of Ochterlony, who after being before deprived of the position of Delhi resident by Sir George Barlow, was now compelled to tender his resignation, which he survived only a few months.t

Dooriun Sal attributed the conduct of the British government to fear, and was consequently emboldened to drop the submissive tone which he had adopted while military preparations were in progress, and assert his claims, not as regent, but as rajah. The new Delhi resident, Sir Charles Metcalfe, advocated the same policy as that which had cost his predecessor so dearly; and his representations, in conjunction with the warlike proceedings of Doorjun Sal, induced the supreme government to resolve on espousing the cause of Bulwunt Sing. An attempt at negotiation having failed, an army, comprising about 21,000 meu and above a hundred pieces of heavy ordnance, marched against Bhurtpoor in December, 1825, under the direction of Lord Combermere. The garrison was believed to comprise 20,000 men, chiefly Rajpoots and Jats, with some Afghans; but the best defence of the fortress consisted in its thick high walls of indurated clay, rising from the edge of a broad and deep ditch, flanked by thirty-five tower-bastions, and strengthened by the [•] Trant's Two Years in Ava, 447. Prof. Wilson's Documents Illustrative of Burmese War.

† Wilson's Mill's India, ix., 191.

I See Note to p. 421.

Secretary and the parties for the control

Environment of the second of t at here to remained for exercise to the fine attempt follows the fine of the f with the control of the first the first terms and then endersoned to escape unto the property of the propert the state of the s

The parameters of the paramete

reserved to the second second section of the second section sect The mountains of a series of the series of t entry was a first ordered by a week to be a principle and the top cardion.

the conduct of the Asa war, though the conduct of the Asa war, though the carbinum of the conduct of the Asa war, though the carbinum of the conduct of the carbinum of the ca

The state of the s

The property of the post of th

The series of the control of the series of the company was to the company was to the company was to the control of the control

to defend the real maintenance of a British contingent in the consumer of a British contingent in the consumer of a British contingent in the consumer of a british contingent of a british contingent in the consumer of a british to the interest of a british the face of rupes, as to be employed in the superior of the fitting the contingent of the face of the fitting of the face of the face

ance with the treaty concluded at Tchran in 1814. The point at issue regarded the boundary line between the two countries. The eabinet of St. Petersburg positively refused to accept the arbitration of British officers; and the result was, that a struggle cusued, in which the British took no part: and the Persians, being worsted, were compelled to make peace with Russia by the surrender of the contested territory, in February, 1828.

In the same month Lord Amherst resigned his position, and returned to Eng-The restoration of tranquillity had enabled him to pay some attention to civil matters; and the diffusion of education had been promoted by the formation of collegiate institutions at Agra and at Delhi, as also by the establishment of schools in various provincial towns. The pressure of financial difficulties impeded the full execution of these as well as of other measures required to lighten the burdens and stimulate the commerce of the people of India. The war with Ava had necessitated heavy disbursements. In two years (1824 and '25), the sum of nineteen million sterling had been raised; and at the close of the Amherst administration, "the financial prospects of the country were of a most alarming complexion."* Nearly eighteen months elapsed before the arrival of a new governor-general, and during that time the supreme authority rested in the able hands of the senior member of eouneil, Butterworth Bayley, who busily employed himself in laying the foundation of various internal reforms, which were carried out during the ensuing-

BENTINCE Administration, 1828 to 1835. -After his recall from the government of Madras, in 1807, Lord William Bentinek had remonstrated foreibly against the injustice of making him the victim of measures adopted without his eognizance; and his arguments being seconded by influential family connexions (with Mr. Canning and the Portland family), he eventually obtained the appointment of governor-general, and in July, 1828, arrived in Calcutta. At that time unaecustomed tranquillity prevailed throughout India, and the character of Lord William Bentinek was considered the best guarantce against its disturbance by any aggressive or domincering spirit on the part of the English. A vivacious French traveller (Jacquemont) declared that the actual possessor of the sceptre of the Great Mogul thought and acted like a Pennsylvanian quaker: yet some of the acts of this administration would ecrtainly not have been sanctioned by the great American The influence of Lady Bentinek eoloniser. was unquestionably of the best description; and the improved tone of thought and feeling which pervaded the society of government-house, diffused itself throughout Calcutta and the British presidencies.† All the support derivable from a manly and eonseientions spirit, was needed by one who eame out burdened with the execution of immediate and sweeping retrenehments. No opposition was made to the extensive reduction of the army; but the old question of batta (extra pay) which had called forth the energies of Clive, became afresh the source of bitter discontent. The total diminution, on the present occasion, did not exceed £20,000 per annum; but it fell heavily on individuals: and although the governorgeneral could not avoid enforcing the aecomplishment of stringent orders, he was thereby rendered permanently unpopular with the military branch of the service. The press commented freely on the half-batta regulations, and the discontented officers were wisely suffered to vent and dissipate their wrath in angry letters. The same forbearance was not manifested when the excessive flagellation, which at this period disgraced the discipline of the army, became the theme of eensure; for Lord W. Bentinek, "though a liberal to the very core," held, as had been proved at Vellore, very stern notions on military affairs; and in this, as also in some other eases, showed himself decidedly "inclined to put a gag into the mouth of the press."t

Wilson's continuation of Mill, ix., 234.

In 1829, a regulation was enacted, by which the practice of suttee—that is, of burning or burying alive Hindoo widows -was declared illegal, and the principal persons engaged in aiding or abetting it, became liable to trial for culpable homicide, and were punishable with imprisonment This enactment was far from exand fine. citing the expected degree of opposition. The same unlooked-for facility attended another measure (denounced still more de-

Grey, to hear some music, play chess, and seek a refuge from the general devotion of the English.-

† Knye's Life of Metcalfe, ii., 253.

[†] The altered tone of Calcutta society may be conjectured, from the fact of Jacquemont's going on (Letters from India, i., 101.) Sunday to the house of the chief justice, Sir Charles

PATISFULION OF THUGS SUBMIGATION OF COORG-1831. the state of the s the end by Providence by a law similar to the end by Providence by a law similar to the end of the The typic of the control of the control of the control of the controls the Control of the c Controlly to the control of the amigust of the amigust of the control of the cont

Company to the first the second of the state the party of the first transfer of the first unbapty men, name of feat and the first transfer of feat and the first transfer of feat and the first transfer of the first transfe

The state of the s with the same of t

enter of the street property by Lord Brue to the street of the street of

To the state of th And the state of t

some of the state of the state

The state of the s

The transfer of the deposition of the mountaining of the property of the property of the mountaining of the Asserting Brown of the first of the spirite of Co. 17. Very Regular Walls of the spirite of the mountaining of the mountaining of the spirite of the mountaining of the Mailras of the State of the Mailras of the spirite of the Mailras of the spirite of the spirite of the Mailras of the spirite of the spiri The investment of the first process of the mountaining of the mountaining of the Madra. the first of the state were excepts there is been to have been a domestic direction to be an interesting the state of the

The minecliste occasion op
The minecliste occasion occasion occasion op
The minecliste occasion Of his sector and her husband, which testing as described as the Protection of the British resident. The region was described as the protection of the British and described as the protection of the British and described as the protection of the region and described as the protection of the British and described as the protection of the British and described as the protection of the British and the protection of the British and the British and the protection of the British resident with the second section of the British resident and the British resident and the British resident and the protection of the British resident. The supreme government and the supreme government and the supreme government and the supreme government and the supreme government. The state of the profession of the state of the state of the same and the same and letters.

The state of the same and the

There vague to the relation of the following the strender of his factive to the surrender of his factive where the street of the figure of the company were considered to institu-

The second of the subfor the Performance received received the company, were considered to justify the minimum of the infinite disputed of powerful force for the substitute of the British advanced to the first the disputed of the British advanced to the first the force of the first the For the first term of bridge to the subtrailer. Perform to bridge termination of Court, and entered the name of trailer. Performance to the trailer of the remaining the form of the court of the cour The British advanced of Creek, and entered the principality of the fill of the principality of the fill of the controllers of the raish was controllers which pality for the raish was controllers of the raish was controllers.

The alleged was many quarters. The alleged was contradicted to the region of the defender of the state of I say to be the first test of the community by the person and property as the price week to have been the pite a property as the price.

The transfer of the strates transfer to the processing to the process of the beautiful transfer of the beautiful transfer of the beautiful transfer of the strates of the process of the beautiful transfer of the strates of the beautiful transfer of the strates of the beautiful transfer of the strates of th sentially builted from this community by its person and property as the price size filled from the community by its person and property as the price size filled from the strategy presentable; but the chorts of the branch mauntainers were rendered massifications follows in that they were born to mauntainers were rendered massifications follows in that they were born to mauntainers. Section in the state of the state of the branch to be seen by the overhelm and the branch to be seen to the section of the branch to be seen to the section of the branch to be seen to the section of the branch to be seen to the section of the branch to the section of the section of the branch to the section of the section o destination delivering that they were been for their by the overshelf appendity to and all their fedoration destined for their by numbers and discipline on the part of the invaders, than by the avowed disinchination of Veer Rajundra to organised opposition against the powerful protectors of his an-Merkara, the capital of Coorg, cestors. was captured in April, 1834, and the rajah, with his family, surrendered unconditionally. A committee of inquiry was instituted into the charges adduced against him, and the search made after the seizure of Merkara, brought to light the bodies of seventeen persons, including three relatives of the rajah, who had been put to death by decapitation or strangling, and thrown into a pit in the juugle. This was a melancholy revelation; but such severities are unhappily quito consistent with the ordinary proceedings of despotic governments; and it may well be doubted whether, even if proved beforehand, they could warrant the interference of a foreign state for the deposition of the prince by whom they were committed, in opposition to the will of the neople he governed. Certainly the assumption of sovereignty over the Coorgs could be excused only by the most rigid adherence to the promise given, "that their civil rights and religious usages should be respected, and that the greatest desire should invariably be shown to augment their security, comfort, and happiness. How far these objects have been effected," adds Professor Wilson, "may admit of question; but the province has remained at peace, and the Coorgs have shown no disposition to reassert their independence."*

1stv. 24.

The rajah became a pensioner on the E. I. Cv. Some few years ago he came to England, bringing with him a daughter, a lady-like and intelligent child, to be educated as a Christian. Queen Victoria, by a graceful act of spontaneous kindness calculated to endear her to the vast Indian population beneath her sway, officiated in person as godmother to the young stranger, who, it is to be hoped, will live to merit and enjoy a continuance of the royal favour. The rajah himself has no trace, either in countenance or bearing, of the insane cruelty ascribed to him; and the satisfactory arrangement of the pecuniary question?

. Continuation of Mill's India, ix., 359.

† Relating to the proprietary right to a large sum of money invested by the prince and his family in the Anglo-Indian funds, the interest of which had been regularly paid to the rajah, Veer Rajundra, up to the time of his deposition, which the E. I. Cy. now appear disposed to regard as confiscated.

t The efforts of Lord W. Bentinck were especially now at issue between him and the E. I. Cy. is desirable, as the best means of strengtheniug the confidence of Indian princes in the good faith of the nation in general.

Whatever view may be taken of the conduct of Lord W. Bentinck in this case, and of certain complex arrangements, of comparatively small interest, with Oude, Mysoor, Nagpoor, Jeypoor, and other Indian states, there can be no doubt that the general result of his administration was highly beneficial to the cause of religious civilisation. † Public institutions, whether for educational or charitable purposes, were warmly encouraged; and the almost exclusive agency of European functionaries, which had been the radical defect of the Cornwallis system, was to some extent remedied by the employment of natives in offices of trust and emolument, -not, indeed, to the extent which they have a right to expect eventually, but as much perhaps as the circumstances of the time warranted. opening of the "overland route" by way of the Red Sea, Egypt, and the Mediterranean, and the consequent reduction of the length of transit from four or five months to forty or fifty days (an immense boon to the Anglo-Indian community), was effected mainly through the instrumentality of the late Lieutenant Waghorn, R.N.

The navigation of the Ganges by steamvessels was attempted, and proved entirely successful. & Measures were adopted to procure the unobstructed navigation of the Indus, with a view to the extension of British trade with the countries to the westward as far as the Caspian Sea, and also in the hope of establishing a commanding influence on the Indus, in order to counteract the consequences which might be anticipated from the complete prostration of Persia, and its subservience to the designs of Russia against British India. The orders of the cabinet of St. James were positive, and Lord W. Bentinck must therefore be acquitted of blame for the complex relations formed with the Mohammedan states of Bahawulpoor, Sinde, and Afghanistan, and especially with the wily and ambitious Seik, Runjeet Sing, to whom a present of several directed to the diffusion of the English language among the natives—a measure difficult indeed, but highly desirable in the sight of all their well-wishers.

§ The first voyage between Bombay and Suez, made by the Hugh Lindsay in 1830, occupied thirty days; the second, in the same year, only twenty-two. The passage between England and India now requires fewer weeks than it formerly did months.

METCALFUS PREPARESS ACT, 1835-AUCKLAND ADMINISTRATION, 481

Unplied to seek of interval electors is stature, the inflored to settle at pleasure in India, it s new presented by I scattered Burney, in space not likely they would tamely submit to the name of Walliam IV., in Orther, ISH, thave summary deportation held over them. The reasonal of the charter of the U.L.Cy, has the penalty of offending against the pre-

was attended to it a consister of once in the external and internal tranquillity. constituted of that proceed body, which, Arexievo Americaniania, 1835 to after now tree may be a porch commerced [1842,-- The per or first nominated as the sports to be received to place in abresinor interesty of Leid William Bentinek was the exclusion provinges of terile with China; Lord Heyterbury; but the brief interval of affigure of Hard origin. The fixed displayed thege some granted as usual for outfitting

then the winder of Inda, the means off. The restored Wing calmet, under Lord references the energy placetail, with other Melbourne, bestoard, the Indian vices arrangement it is not became at 6 others the impalty on Lord Auckland, a nobleman of Birthey's reagand for good to en encount fit was generally empowed, might be rafely of all of the west substituted being early in sectioned with the charge of the supreme 1877. The foreign content away of Sir government, which had certainly never been because Metral's were distinguished by a favoured by any preciding functionary o errore which proceed him or the except in der more faremalle throughtness. Per-existed to the winth of second, that the Crit event of importance has one which, fighting to govern end interference weightenigh implicated by an author whose linen 13 gentless, and thing of at all a directional the E.I. Cy.," hererthelms appears to 12-2, so haften the historicans of Mr. Silk, the parter of the payment northen not of It direction by Mr. Adam, his paper manifested injustice, the blane of which rests center of by a express a of pared free, an fellietly on the Hombay authorities; for

The views of Ser Clarkes Metralic, with tarrly and reluctant assent to their ilevirepart to the presence as astore of our Instead. The measure in question was the dan engine, mem of a decidedly execulate position of the rajah of Sattara, the legi-generated and alarmest character. In 1926, too are successor of Serajee, who had been from the same to be to be, " its ensling the fer impolicy of his reinstatement need not rations to throw all our paling" and a bodiscossed. Pertal Scin, then twenty-seven remote reserved by Law in October, 1879, I years of age, showed unbounded delight at expressed, with some starguess, the mean-this restoration to what he undisquisedly returned attendent on the proceedings of viewed as real power, and diligently set generalized for dien their way into the about improving his little sovereignty. Sucnewspapers. Despite a une apparent incom- considerate at his court-Grant Duff, sistency, the strengous ediorsey of the Igenerals Briggs and Robertson, and Colonel freeless of the year, at all harvids, would I leidnick-bore nituess to the general excelhave been a proceeding weithy his frank flence of his administration from 1819 to supposed, to the interests of his employers, minical superstitions, and the employment The change rould secreely have been long . Mr. Dhard Thomton, lead of the statistical delayed; for now that Linghelmen were to department at the India House, for the term of twenty years (1803 to 1803), broadism of a despotic governor, in a time of

as well as wal. It has but extreme late politic power enjoyed by the Tory ministry baying call reality, or it, in conjugate a with the expired before his loudship could quit ling. From a Conjugate of the direct the land, the appointment was concelled, the restricted to the above. Core, and charged Jeaponics being forfeited by the R. I. Cy.

river many pages of these lost my. The est Welliams framulation character and business habits, who, sured explained and equally individualistic feet transpolity, a diminishing debt, and sensitive. This potential is the entered of the discrepting commerce, required to promise an entered of a property of the property of the property and homographic administration; unwell that cap covered entered men with the property of proved the very reverse. The ended to Language to extend of the end of entirely reflects equal credit on himself

As printed and which the few had not effect, file new povernor specieral page but a

be bed devisited the rest dangers of appliced on the muenud in 1819. The policy and manly character; but it would be diffi-cult to justify his conduct in concerns a qualification, the specified drawback being measure, honever landable in itself, in op-the new feature of weakness of mind maniposition to the will, and, as it was generally fested by an excessive addiction to Brah-

of women in the management of elephants, as guards, and in other unusual offices. forged, pretended correspondence produced. These complaints were the first indication of an altered tone on the part of the local authorities, and were probably the earliest results of a conspiracy formed against the rajah in his own palace. The favourable nature of the testimony regarding his conduct previously sent to England, had drawn from the Court of Directors repeated expressions of warm and generous praise. In 1829 he was declared to be "remarkable among the princes of India for mildness, frugality, and attention to business;" in 1831, "his disposition and capacity for goverument" are again noticed; and in Deeember, 1835, a letter was addressed to him, landing the "exemplary fulfilment" of his duties as "well calculated to promote the prosperity of his dominions and the happiness of his people," and acknowledging "the liberality displayed in executing various public works of great utility, which has so justly raised your reputation in the eyes of the princes and people of India, and gives you an additional claim to our approbation, respect, and applause." This testimony was accompanied by a handsome sword, the most marked tribute of respect which could be offered to a Mahratia. The letter and sword were arbitrarily detained by the Bombay government, and never presented to the rajah, whose feelings about this time became irritated by a controversy with them regarding certain jaghires to which he laid claim. A conspiracy was, it is believed, concocted against him by a vindictive, ungrateful, and proffigate brother, and the rajah was accused of endeavouring to procure the overthrow of British power by three extraordinary measures: - first, by striving to corrupt the entire Anglo-Indian army through two native officers of a regiment stationed at Sattara; second, by inducing the Portuguese at Goa to land 30,000 European troops in India, who were to be marched overland for the purpose; third, by cor- feelings of an innocent man. A hody of responding with the fugitive ex-rajah of troops marched at midnight into the pulace, Nagpoor, who had neither character, influence, nor ability,-not a shilling, nor an the rainh was made prisoner in his heat. acre of territory, and was himself dependent all his property seized; and ere morning evidence of forged documents and pripared witnesses, a similar case has come to light. All Morad, one of the Ameers of Sinde, having been convicted of forgery, had a large portion of his territories corfiscated by the British government. The necessar,

on charity. The seals of the reach were and other artial schemes successfully carried through. There was at this time a vague feeling of alarm throughout India relative to a general rising against British supre-macy: the press at home and abroad gave conntenance to the idea; and Sir Charles Metcalfe declared he should not be surprised "to wake some fine morning and find the whole thing blown up." Sir Robert Grant, then governor of Bombay, and some officials around him, fell into the trap, and despatches of several hundred paragraphs were written regarding the alleged application of the right for the aid of 30,000 Portnenese soldiers. when, at that time, thirty would have been an impossibility; and great alarm was professed lest 200,000 British soldiers-Mussulmen as well as Hindoos, who had ever proved themselves true to their salt—should be seduced from their allegiance by this petty prince, who was no warrior, but an excellent farmer and landlord. The supreme government of India at first treated the affair with the contempt it merited: but reiterated calumnies began to take effect; and the alarm once given, the most absurd stories, many of which carried with them the proof of their falsehood," were believed by men who were afterwards ashamed to confess their credulity. Sir R. Grant died, and Sir James Carnac, then chairman of the Court of Directors, succeeded him. He went to Sattara in 1889, :and required the raish to aeknowledge his guilt, sign a new treaty, and all would be forgiven. Pertab Sein refused to declare himself a traitor to the British government: asked for a copy of the charges against him, and demanded a fair hearing and a public trial. Sir J. Carnae was a kind and moderate man; but the strong prejudices-not to use a harsher term-of his associates warped his judgment, and led him to view the conduct of the rejah as the continued contamacy of a rebel, instead of the offended feelings of an innocent man. A body of led by the successful plotter. Appa Salab:

· Since the deposition of the Sattara rajah, on the | Sheik Ali Hussein, and heen prime minister of the

ETAIL OF TELEFORETHY WILL WIS FORDS CHANGES Section for the second to the second of the second of the forest at the second Senting Anna & Sen Arms of British April Anna Special Sections (Senting Special Sections) and a required the Senting Special Special Sections (Senting Special Sections) and a required Special Sections (Sections Special Sections (Sections Special Sections Sections Special Sections Sections Special Sections Secti Lead the good way and hand hand by times. After a fire terms of products and being the country of products and being the products of finish tension.

The products are the terms of products and being the country of products are being the country of products and being the country of products are being the country of products and being the country of products are being the country of products and being the country of products are being the country of products and being the country of products are being the country of t the many of the term of the print

The majority than the market of the party of the majority to majority the majority of the majo The expect and pay the creation interior of the interior by Mayammed her too the formal terminal and the formal terminal and the major and the major and the formal terminal and the major and the major and the formal and the major and the formal and the major and the formal an Excepture: and pay the except analyses, when he purpose to a pay use in-true exposed the tolk and integer of the Helmon But Hopenman by the purpose, and in-Freedure: and had the exemple survived them he boulded from Moon and Moon and Moon was found from the bound for many property from the bound for many property from the bound for many property from the bound for many former. The next and all absorbing for month of the boundary we shall be a survived from the former of the boundary we shall be a survived from the former of the boundary we shall be a survived from the former of the boundary we shall be a survived from the former of the boundary we shall be a survived from the former of the boundary we shall be a survived from the former of the boundary we shall be a survived from the boundary with the boundary we shall be a survived from the boundary with the boundary we shall be a survived from the boundary with the boundary we shall be a survived from the boundary with the boundary we shall be a survived from the boundary with the boundary we shall be a survived from the boundary with the boundary with the boundary with the boundary we shall be a survived from the boundary with the boundary we shall be a survived from the boundary with the boun ne measure of finites would probably when his brother to made processing and probably when his brother to make processing him.

The next and all-absorbing feature of the Alchan opently, on his remail to call men his him processing administration is the Alchan opently, on his remail to call men his him.

is necessary to explain the condition of the territories on our western frontier. Zemann Shah, the Afghan ruler of Cabool, against whom a treaty was negotiated with Persia whom a treaty was negotiated with tersia in 1801, by Sir John Malcolm, was deposed and blinded in the same year by his brother Malmood—treatment precisely similar to that bestored by him on his immediate predecessor, Humayan, Mahmood was, in turn, displaced by a fourth brother, named Snojnhconqueror refrained from inflicting conqueror retrained from minering legal tinction of sight, which, though not a legal disqualification to sovereign power, usually ool-7100lk. proves an insuperable bar to the claims of Soojah could not keep the

any cananance Soojan coma not arrived throne he had gained; hat heing expelled throne no ma games, me near coping the reviving strength of Mahmonl, any candidate. oy me reviving screngen of mannon, sought refuge with Ranject Sing, who planson, sought refuge with respect to the second gondar reinge when remuleer sink who have the famous Koh-i-Noor (the gem of the English Exhibition of 1851), and made him prisence. By the exertion of an unexpected amount of skill and resolution, Shah Soojah succecded in making his escape in the disguise of a mendicant, and reached the British or a menuicant, and reactive the 1816, station of Loodiana in September, 1816, whither his family together with Nemann Shah, had previously found refuge.

chief, who had been mainly instrumental in | Bokhara, in 1893; and the Pintial, Montan, and Dera Chara Klash, Dera tensor, then, and carrying out the late revolution, evinced lastly Parliamer, fell to the classes to elecate the revolution. carrying out the late revolution, evinored Derz Ghaza Khan, Ders sami) Khan, and to make the Barukaye Can, or which the same and to make the Barukaye Can, or which the same and to make the Barukaye Can, or which the same and to make the Barukaye Can, or which the same and to make the Barukaye Can, or which the same and to make the Barukaye Can, or which the same and to make the Barukaye Can, or which the same and the mood did not, however, possess the throng chief, who had been mainly intermmental in

• Sir Charles Forbes, Bridge of the first of the form of the first of with Mr. Joseph Hume, Mike straining to since Commendation ber, and many street manufact of since Commen

Auckland administration is the Arghan quently, on his penest to call upon his point and the minimum to the minimum had a surrounder the minimum had a surrounder to understand the origin of which it there to surrounder had a literally backed to make he the condition of the mass literally backed to make he had call to be its processory to explain the condition of the mass literally backed to make he had call to be its processory to explain the condition of the literally backed to make he had call to be its processory to explain the condition of the literally backed to make he had call upon his point of the literally backed to make he will upon his point to be a surrounder to explain the condition of the literally backed to make he had call upon his point to be a surrounder to be a su maye himself master of the city of Capping in

1818, Shah Mahmood and Kuntan ostah lished themselves in Herat, and the usurper turned his attention to the ulluis of that cornect and protect a much botter tiple munk differences to boutous with mount ink the fortons intributes of the property tak the Jentons matikues of the highest m house amountain Rhup Zanlup to attaulit tokulumi humin M. Ilm wint of Cultum! put nittinit office. some or comme on Marine Ampelentia int commencement in Mahmmund telling und Kinkajom tommjer på Vipner i imprijer in propi witho time of the doubt of that take is the family of the acting time of the west of Kharasani 10 the fring' and team the Oxide to the ware the Old the mua, macrena cao centra to tro non-centra di miy westerness Learning hundy, Culump Qlinaquanit, Qlinshnat Cairquine, megan, Ghorehand, Beloochean lad heamin ingebendene unger schief maner Wohen rue semmenae neamenanu ma heamp machanane tomas results mana represent to recovered by Persia; Heint was retained by Prince Ranger of Leasing Meridian of Marie of the Marie o mood did not, however, Porsess the throne Prince Kantran, after the death of King of in Peace.

This rizier, Fatteli Khan, an able Bokhara, in 1823; and the Panish, Manhan chief, who had been mainly instrumental in who gaverned conjointly under the title of "the Ameers"-generally needed the presence of an army to compel the payment of their arrears of tribute. Cahool itself, and a considerable portion of the Hazernh country, was under the immediate sway of Dost Mohammed; Candahar, and the adjacent territory, was held by his three brothers. Kohen-dil-Khan, Rehem-dil-Khan, and Mehir-dil-Khan, under the name of sirdars or governors.

The divided and independent governments he ond the Indus were in a condition well calculated to secure our power, without any infraction of the strict neutrality which the English rulers so ostentationsly declared it their desire to preserve, when, in 1838, an attack was made on Herat by the Shah of Persia, with the aid of Russian officers.* Herat has been called the key of Afghanistan: it is also the gate towards which all the great roads from Central Asia to India converge; and the Calcutta authorities became exceedingly alarmed at the probability of its falling under the influence of Russia. They became very solicitous that Afghanistan should maintain entire independence, and reject the profered alliance with the Muscovite court. Lieutenant Burnes was dispatched on an embassy to Dost Mohammed, or "the Dost," as he was commonly called; but although the instructions of Burnes were explicit regarding the nonreception of Russian envoys, and other demands to be exacted on the part of the English, he had nothing beyond idle professions of regard to offer in return; not even mediation with Runject Sing for the restoration of Peshawur, which the Seik conqueror was willing to surrender to any one except to the ruler of Cabool, from whom it had been taken.

The contrast between the magnificent presents brought by Mountstuart Elphiustone to Afghanistan, on a former occasion, with the pistol and telescope, pins, needles, and playthings, now offered to the Dost reign to the throne from whence he had for himself and the inmates of the zenana, could not but be painfully felt; yet the chief knew the value of British protection, and was not disposed to take offence jeet Sing affixed his signature to the treaty lightly. But he could not afford to reject the direct offers of assistance, in Koh-i-Noor gleaming on his arm. § In remen and money, made by the secretary of turn for furnishing a few thousand troops the Russian legation, without some clear guarantee against the evil effects of such rejection; and as this was positively refused, he had literally no alternative but to accept the Russo-Persian alliance. It would have heen only common prudence, on the part of the supreme government, to have waited the issue of the siege of Herat, before proceeding further; but Lord Auckland was unhappily enjoying the cool breezes of Simla, away from his legitimate advisers at Calcutta, and was, it is said, considerably under the influence of two or three elever and impulsive men, who may have been excellent secretaries and amusing tablecompanions, but were very ill-adapted for wary counsellors. † It would have been an easy matter to convert Dost Molammed. the sirdars of Candaliar, and the whole Barnkaye clan, into firm allies; nevertheless, Lord Auckland, in an hour of weakness and indecision, was induced to seek the cooperation of Runject Sing for the restoration of Shah Soojah; and, although the defeat of the Persian army, and its withdrawal, after a ten months' siege, I secured the independence of Herat, and removed one main incentive to war, the projected invasion was carried out despite the apathy of the Seik ruler (now fast sinking to his grave, under the combined influence of age and the most hateful excesses) and the scarcely disguised distrust of Soojah, who could not comprehend why the assistance repeatedly refused by Lord W. Bentinck, was liestowed unasked by Lord Auckland. Perhaps so perilous an enterprise was never more rashly and needlessly undertaken. It was wrong in principle, weak in execution, and appalling in its results. Shah Soojah was not even presumptive heir to the usurped dominions of his grandfather; for Kamran, the son of the elder brother Mahmood, had a prior claim. professed object of the Tripartite Treaty now formed, viz., to restore a legitimate sovebeen wrongfully expelled, was therefore absolutely false; and as if to make the spirit of the whole transaction more evident, Runat Lahore, June, 1838, with the ill-gotten

[·] One of the alleged reasons being the activity with which the slave-trade was carried on at Hernt. + Mr. H. Torrens, and John Colvin, Lord Auckland's private secretary.-Kaye's War in Afghanistan. writers on the Afghan war to have formed part of

¹ Lt. Eldred Pottinger cheered, counselled, and fought with the garrison throughout the weary siege. This finmous stone is said by several modern

to be paid by Shah Sojah, Ranjeet Sing 1000 camp followers, were levied from the way to be confirmed in Procession of all the 15-1. Cy.'s inditary stations, and placed was to be confirmed in Procession wrested by under the naminal command of Timur the territory and taken a Problem of the state of the name of the state of the sta was to be construct in Procession of an tire in the Cyc. mintary stations, and placed under the nominal command of Timur, the contracts and problems in the state of Social-cool-Moolk; the whole the problems is the problem in the contract of Social-cool-Moolk; the whole As to the English believe to morning command in a many the As to the English believe to be Bench officers and mid from the from Cabada. As to the English, eldest son of Sonjahood Moolk; the whole live were withing to back need and money the British treasury.

However, and paid from Bunjeet Sing and to the state of supply a continent of G(KX) men, and to the state of supply a continent of G(KX) men, and to state and the state of supply a continent. The commission of the sake of state of 15,000 men as an army of observational modern of the sake of the state of the behavior.

The commission of the sake of the dream defined transcences were extremely deficient, and extraction of our Power and the dream defined transcences. etration of our lower statement). They defile a transcending extremely deficient, and with rendering to work of the divery defiles from common common of months of the divergence of the common who sentured to speak of the dream defiles (rangements were extremely deficient, and live entropy deficient), and of the enormous number of comp followers, instructed a control of the property of the property of the control of deficulties to a march of extraord to the property of the property of the following parted new difficulties to a march of the instruction of the remarks and the following length, through the territory, difficulties, the property and the service of the following services and the service of the following services and the service of the following services and the depreciations of certain mountains of the following services of the following services and the depreciations of certain mountains.

The state of the statement from the statement the depreciations of certain mountain states of the statement from the statement the depreciations also said to Candalas. well regions. Considerately traights with panil the deprecations of certain mountains.

The same and agree attractive continues of training and the constitution of containing and accounted to the constitution of containing and the continues of containing and the containing and t

The article and articular commission tribes, to encounter on the road to Candalar, and the American County of the American the American the County of the article that the American the County of world offer encounter on the score of the first offer the month of 1832, by the first offer the month of 1832, by the first offer the month of 1832, by the first offer the month of the treat of 1832, by the first offer the month of the treat of 1832, by the month of the treat of 1832. for the mentry form near by the month once exposition on the score of the first, by the month included infraction of the treaty of 1832, by near the first of the findusters of the first of the findusters of th enter the property of the formal transfer of the lines which the K. I. Cy, when desirous to open enters to the lines, expressly described to the lines, expressly described to the lines, expressly described to the lines of the enters to be seen to the form there are the horsest that it would be employed by them. The American plant it would be employed by them the form the folly of remonstrating the form the folly of remonstrating the folly of the plant to the folly of the folly of the plant to the folly of the fo

The state of the firetiment to with a few rich city of Hydershad. They Entering the rich city of Hyderabad. They was bested from the first extended by the firs

Some the state of the order of the management that the first the forestern to the remarks of the first t Plant to the reserving that the fire Lides, the Presented of the Index Share to the recently of the beauty of the beauty of the Lides of the Lides of the lates o The state of the British and the state of th gente glanten gente week eengant projekting to genante wij to genanten die geneel een tij en tij trigen het. In 1885 van de geneel geneel was een die genaam die geneel geneel en die genaal een die genaal bester werk. In 1885 van de geneel geneel genaard in jouwer te bloom die geneel ein die genaal bester die genaal bester wek Geneel die geneel geneel die geneel genaard op die geneel die geneel die geneel ein die genaal bester die genaa Service of the servic men of the second of the secon with horse, to be a minimum and the second of the second o

The first state of the second of th An office and the second of th Common agramatical de la companya d Common agramatical de la companya de de la companya del la companya de la companya del la companya de la companya de la companya del la companya de la companya de la companya de la companya del la companya de traversed the weary Bolan Pass, and the dangerous and difficult Kojuck defile with success, but at a fearful cost of life, * especially on the part of the camp followers, from heat and want of water. Candahar (the capital of Western Afghanistan), was occupied without resistance by Shah Soojah and his allies, in April, 1839. Kohun-dil-Klian and his brother sirdars fled as the foe advanced; and English gold scattered lavishly on all sides, enabled the returning monarch to win the temporary suffrage of several Barukzye chiefs. In the following June the army under Sir John Keane and Shah Soojalı left a garrison at Candahar and set out for Ghuznee. This ancient fortress proved stronger than had been expected; but a nephew of Dost Mohammed deserted from the garrison, and betrayed the important secret, that an entrance called the Cabool gate had not, like the rest, been built up with stone, but had been left slightly barricaded in the expectation of supplies. The besiegers, acting on this information, fastened bags of gunpowder upon the wooden door at night, and by setting them on fire effected a practicable breach, through which a storming party, led by Colonel Dennie, immediately secured an entrance, captured the town, and, after some hours' resistance, the citadel also, receiving little loss, but slaying 1,000 Afghans: 3,000 more were wounded or captured. Among the prisoners were about fifty fanatics of all ages, who had assumed the name of Ghazee, in right of being engaged in holy warfare against infidels. These men, the first taken in arms against Shah Soojah, "were hacked to death with wanton barbarity by the knives of his executioners."

The state of the s

The second secon

So much for the magnanimity of the restored monarch in his short hour of triumph. The campaign thus successfully opened, was to some extent overshadowed by tidings of the death of Runjeet Sing, in 1839; but notwithstanding the jealous dislike evinced towards the English by the new authorities at Lahore, the Seik contingent, wretchedly insufficient as it was, became serviceable in the hands of Colonel Wade; and this energetic officer, with his nominal coadjutor the Shahzada (Prince Timur), who was "an absolute cypher," contrived, partly by fighting, partly by diplomacy, to traverse the formidable Khyber Pass, at the head of a motley assemblage of Hindoos, Seiks, and Afghans. Akber Khan, Dost Mohammed's favourite "fighting son," was recalled from his camp near Jellalabad, to join his father at Cabool, and the path being left open, Wade marched on and seized Jellalabad.

The position of Dost Mohammed was daily rendered more perilous by the desertion of his relatives and followers. Very shortly after the taking of Ghuznee, he attempted to compromise matters by offering to submit to the restoration of Shah Soojah, on condition of his own nomination to his late brother Futteh Khan's position of vizier. This proposition was of course rejected; for so far from being inclined to delegate authority to his opponent, Shah Soojah desired nothing better than to "hang the dog"—a procedure which the British envoy, Mr. Macnaghtan, does not appear to have considered otherwise than advisable, provided they could catch him. ‡

The Dost desired to give the invaders battle at Maidan, on the Cabool river, but treachery and disaffection surrounded him on every side, and his camp at Urghundeh fairly fell to pieces. The venal Kuzzilbashes (or Persian guard) forsook the master whose salt they had eaten thirteen In vain he entreated them to staud by him in one charge against the Feringhees, that he might die with honour,—the spiritstirring appeal fell on the listless ears of men determined to purchase safety by desertion; and, attended by a few faithful followers, Dost Mohammed in despair turned his horse's head towards the Hindoo-Koosh, leaving his guns standing.

Cabool opened its gates with "sullen, surly submission;" and Shah Soojah entered the Balla Hissar or palace-citadel in triumph, while his British allies sounded a long loud note of triumph, the European echocs of which were destined to die away in the very saddest cry of anguish and humiliation ever uttered by the proud conquerors of India. The authorities at Cabool soon discovered that the foreign bayonets and foreign gold which had been the means of replacing Shah Soojah on the throne of Afghanistan, were likewise the sole method of keeping him there. Lord Auckland desired the return of the entire "army of the Indus;" but the unpopularity of the Shah was too evident to admit of such a step, unless we were willing to confess the whole affair a

[•] Of 100,000 camp followers, only 20,000 reached Candahar.—(Capper's Three Presidencies, p. 212.) + Vide John William Kaye's graphic and fearless History of the War in Afghanistan, i., 445. † Idem., 561.

